This book truly transcends culture. We are using it to help train over three thousand pastors here in Nigeria—who in turn can train other men in our churches throughout West Africa.

REV. MUSA NCHOCK ASAKA

Director of Leadership Development, Evangelical Churches of West Africa (ECWA)

One of the best men's books ever written—indispensable reading for today's men's movement.

CHARLES BLAKE

*Bishop, West Angeles Church of God in Christ
Los Angeles, California*

Gene's "Measure of a Man" seminars and general assembly presentations have been a godsend to thousands of men at our Maximum Man Conferences. Gene also lives what he teaches. We heartily recommend The Measure of a Man for personal and small-group use.

KEITH BOYD

Executive Director, Ministry to Men Foundation

I encourage every pastor to use this book for discipling men. It's a classic in the field.

JIMMY DRAPER

President, Southern Baptist Convention Sunday School Board Nashville, Tennessee

The Measure of a Man will help us all effectively serve this new hour of national awakening among Christian men.

JACK W. HAYFORD

Senior Pastor, The Church On The Way VanNuys, California

Seldom have I seen any book make the personal impact in so many men as this one has. It delivers even more than it promises.

HOWARD HENDRICKS

*Distinguished Professor, Dallas Theological Seminary
Chairman, Center for Christian Leadership Dallas, Texas*

I have used The Measure of a Man with my church leaders ever since I first read it 16 years ago. I consider it a classic for men who want to become spiritual leaders.

JOHN MAXWELL

*Senior Pastor, Skyline Wesleyan Church
San Diego, California*

This book has real substance!

TED MAXWELL

President and Founder, Men Alive, Canada

I recommend The Measure of a Man. It is a classic that continues to be the basis for men's Bible studies around the world. This is a "Promise Keepers" kind of book!

BILL MCCARTNEY

Founder, Promise Keepers

I know of no tool more biblical and practical than The Measure of a Man. It's excellent!

DAVID MCCOMBS

Men's Ministry, Campus Crusade for Christ

I believe that this book is especially relevant as it relates to developing character of Black men in the midst of the crisis we face in urban America. I pray that it will get wide distribution within the African-American community.

DR. JOHN M. PERKINS

Publisher, Urban Family Magazine

I'm excited about this new edition of The Measure of a Man. It's been a classic in men's literature. This new edition includes powerful illustrations that have grown out of Gene's own ministry to men.

BRIAN PETERSEN

Editor, New Man Magazine

I highly recommend The Measure of a Man. It is practical, biblical and filled with experience!

RON RAND

Author, For Fathers Who Aren't in Heaven

Foreword

The Measure of a Man is a classic! My good friend and fellow pastor, Dr. Gene Getz, helped pioneer the men's movement with this timeless book. Growing out of his church-planting experience, while meeting with a group of men for Bible study and prayer, Gene suggested they study the maturity profile outlined by Paul to Timothy and Titus (see 1 Tim. 3 and Titus 1). Impressed and motivated by the insights from Scripture and by what these men shared from their own life experiences, Gene began to journal.

One day, Bill Greig, Jr., then the president of Gospel Light, was visiting in Dallas and stopped by Gene's office to get an update on this new church plant called Fellowship Bible Church. It was then that Gene shared his notations that grew out of the men's Bible study. Before Bill left Gene's office, he had a commitment from Gene to write a book based on the 20 character qualities outlined by Paul.

Little did Bill or Gene realize what would happen. First published in 1974, The Measure of a Man has never gone out of print and has been translated into numerous languages and used around the world to motivate men to live a more Christlike life. When Gene is asked why this volume has had this incredible shelf life, he simply answers—"I borrowed the outline from the apostle Paul, who got it from the Holy Spirit." Then with tongue in cheek, he adds—"When we get to heaven, Paul will probably get the rewards and I'll be penalized for plagiarism."

This new and fresh revision brings even more insights to the biblical profile of maturity. As a pastor, I have used this book with my own church leaders ever since I read it years ago. I consider it a classic for men who want to become spiritual leaders. I recommend it highly. Taken seriously, The Measure of a Man will change your life and the life of your church.

True Stories

Five Super Bowls Later!

One day I received a call from D. D. Lewis, former linebacker with the Dallas Cowboys. “I’m in trouble,” D. D. said, “and I need help! Will you help me?”

D. D.’s voice sounded desperate. “Sure,” I replied. “Let’s meet Thursday morning.”

While playing with the Cowboys, D. D. attended the church I pastored. After participating in five Super Bowls under Coach Tom Landry, he eventually retired and went into business. At some point, he had stopped attending church and I had lost contact with him.

Unfortunately, things didn’t go well for D. D. He experienced two business failures and eventually went through a painful divorce that also left him alienated from his children. Although he was a professing Christian, his life had deteriorated.

As we met that Thursday morning, this once-powerful man on the football field poured out his sad story. He knew he needed spiritual help and more accountability.

Getting Back on Track

As I sat with D. D. that day, I saw the desperation in his eyes. “I’ll help you,” I replied. “Let’s meet once a week for breakfast, and then work through my book The Measure of a Man.”

D. D. was grateful. He would read a chapter each week, and then we would meet to talk, discuss and pray.

“You’ll need to be honest with me,” I said. “No secrets. If you fail in some area of your life, you’ll need to admit it up front and get back on track with the Lord.”

Again, D. D. agreed and together we worked through the chapters in this book. Later, he wrote me and shared the following:

Meeting with you and going through your book, The Measure of a Man, helped usher me back into renewed relationships with the family of God. This study showed me that God does have a design and standard for godly men to follow. With your loving encouragement, I have been able to see that God loves me in spite of my past behavior (Titus 3:3-7), and that my journey toward maturity is a process and not an overnight quick-fix emotional sensation.

Our time together fostered in me a real thirst for God’s Word. It has sustained me through some rough periods and trials. I have found out that most men have the same problems over the years, and that healing begins when we share ourselves with other godly men.

An Experience I Will Never Forget

As D. D. and I sat week after week, working through The Measure of a Man, my thoughts went back to a dynamic Bible study I had with a group of men in Dallas. We met on 20 successive Thursday mornings—from 6:45 to 7:45—in the Downtowner Motel conference room before we all went off to work for the day. We wanted to discover from Scripture and from each other how we could become better husbands, better fathers, better Christians—in short, more mature men of God.

What made this time with D. D. Lewis so special was that the book we were using to study what God says about becoming a mature man of God grew out of that earlier group Bible study. You see, I was so excited about what was happening in all of our lives that I began to duplicate the experience in writing. The end result was this book.

An Inspiring Father and Son Story

College was a new experience for me. During my freshman year I was meeting a new group of friends. The pace of life got busier and busier. I did get involved in some Christian activities, but much of what I was doing was just “filler.” I didn’t feel I was really connecting with God.

One day my dad called and asked me a simple question: “How are you doing, Grant; how are you doing spiritually?” I paused for what seemed a long time, and then answered, “I’m not doing so great, Dad, I mean, with my relationship with God. At times I’m actually faking my spiritual walk.”

That simple but direct question from my dad ended with a great conversation. He didn’t preach at me or make me feel guilty. I felt he was sincerely interested in me and what was happening in my life. I realized more than ever how privileged I was to have a father who really cared.

As I reflected on our conversation, I wrote Dad a letter and suggested that we do something special during the summer when I’d be back home. In essence, I said, “Thanks a lot for asking me that question the other night on the phone. I really want to connect with you this summer. I’m looking forward to coming home and to connecting with you—and God.”

Needless to say, Ron (Grant’s father) was excited about this opportunity. They had their first meeting early in the morning at Starbucks—and became regulars that summer. To guide their conversation they chose my book The Measure of a Man. They prepared for each meeting by reading two chapters and then talked about how they could develop these qualities in their lives. They also set goals by using the application section at the end of each chapter.

What they read in each chapter often became a catalyst for deep, personal interaction between father and son.

Grant: I think one of the most meaningful experiences is when we were able to simply put The Measure of a Man down and just talk one-on-one. My dad shared experiences from his own life when he was in college—his own successes and failures—which showed me he was a real guy who faced the same struggles and temptations I was experiencing.

Ron: One of the great things about using The Measure of a Man as a guide for our discussions was how much I learned. I remember sitting across from my son thinking, Here I am an older man who is supposed to be dispensing this fatherly wisdom, but as Grant shared insights with me, his dad, I was really inspired. Our discussions were definitely a two-way street. We were learning together.

That summer was a great experience for father and son—so much so that they wanted to continue their conversations after Grant returned to his college campus. Together they formulated a plan. They decided to use the same pattern they had followed all summer. Early Tuesday mornings Ron would go to Starbucks, order his coffee, and wait for his cell phone to ring. At 6:30—most of the time—Grant called his dad. They each had their copies of The Measure of a Man in front of them and they reviewed the qualities of maturity described in each chapter and then evaluated the goals they had set during the summer to see how they were progressing.

Looking back on this experience, here are their reflections:

Ron: I'm convinced that this study is the perfect book to help fathers connect with their sons. It opens a door for you to invite your son into your life at a deeper level.

Grant: I'm just so thankful that I've been able to grow in my relationship with God, and even more importantly, to grow in my relationship with my father. I've discovered that I can know God better because I know Dad better.

How Do We Measure Maturity?

The apostle Paul outlined in his two pastoral letters 20 dynamic qualities for measuring maturity—his first letter to Timothy and the one he wrote to Titus (see 1 Tim. 3:1-7; Titus 1:5-10). These are the qualities that formed the basis of the Bible study I mentioned earlier. Each Thursday morning, one of us in the group took about 30 minutes to share what we could learn from Scripture about each particular quality. We then spent another 30 minutes in discussion and personal sharing, focusing primarily on how we could develop each quality more adequately in our lives.

Our study together had a profound impact on all of us. As I helped lead some of these sessions, and as I simply listened and participated, my own life was influenced and changed in some profound ways. What was happening in all of our lives motivated me to share this experience with other men. What you hold in your hands is an updated version of The Measure of a Man. As you study, reflect on what Paul wrote to Timothy nearly 2,000 years ago:

The things which you have heard from me in the presence of many witnesses, entrust these to faithful men who will be able to teach others also (2 Tim. 2:2).

Thinking and Growing Together

God has designed the Body of Christ so that each member contributes to the spiritual growth of other members of the Body. As Paul wrote to the Ephesians, it's as "every joint supplies, according to the proper working of each individual part" that the Body will grow and mature in love (Eph. 4:16). We are "members one of another" (Rom. 12:5) and we need each other.

Consequently, at the end of each chapter, you'll find a section entitled "Thinking and Growing Together." To get the most from this study, join a small group of men and work through these questions together. You'll be glad you did.

CHAPTER 1

Becoming a Faithful Man

Insights from the Workaday World

I had a fascinating experience one day when I was conducting a Measure of a Man seminar in Chicago. Two men sitting near the front row were obviously interested in what I was sharing about the list of 20 qualities of maturity that Paul outlined in his letters to Timothy and Titus. While I was speaking, they gave me positive feedback, not only with body language, but also with words such as: “That’s right, Gene”; “That’s true”; “That’s a good point.”

Encouraged, I went over and sat at their table during the next coffee break. I discovered they were both in upper management in a large steel mill in Gary, Indiana. Furthermore, they were both brand-new Christians. One of the men said, “Gene, this is outstanding material. We’ve heard it before, but not from the Bible.” The other man agreed, and then added, “Yeah, I’ve heard of Timothy before, but this Titus guy, I’ve never heard of him.”

*How do we recognize a “man of God”?
What does he look like?*

At that moment, I knew I was relating to men who were not only new Christians, but who also knew little about the Bible. And I soon discovered these men were not new to the field of management. They made an observation I’ll never forget. “You know,” they said, “this is the first time we’ve heard this list of qualifications from the Bible. But we’ve learned from experience in hiring people for middle-management positions that these are the kind of men we’re looking for. We want employees who have a good reputation. We don’t want a man who is cheating on his wife or sleeping around, because chances are, he’ll cheat the company. We certainly don't want a man who has all kinds of domestic problems. If he can't handle his own family, how in the world is he going to handle people in our steel mill?" These men outlined characteristic by characteristic what they had learned from experience regarding mature qualifications. Interestingly, they realized that their basic list of mature qualifications closely paralleled Paul's list.

I was intrigued and fascinated. We had been looking at qualities of maturity inspired by the Holy Spirit and outlined by Paul nearly 2,000 years ago. And here were two men who were new Christians and knew little about the Bible, but had learned by experience that this biblical profile is pragmatic and essential in selecting people who will serve in responsible positions.

Timothy in Ephesus

When Paul wrote his second letter to Timothy, he referred to a "man of God" who is "equipped for every good work" (2 Tim. 3:17). This raises an important question. How do we recognize a "man of God"? What does he look like?

These are not new questions. They were going through Timothy's mind when Paul left him in Ephesus to establish the Church. He had to deal with men who wanted to be spiritual leaders.

Paul commended these men for aspiring to serve in a leadership role. Yet he cautioned Timothy to make sure that each man who wanted to serve was a certain kind of man (see 1 Tim. 3:1).

Titus in Crete

Titus faced the same challenge in his ministry. Paul left him in Crete to appoint spiritual leaders in towns where they had established churches (see Titus 1:5). Again, Paul cautioned Titus to make sure that these men measured up to certain qualifications.

Apparently, Titus faced problems in Crete that were more difficult to resolve than those Timothy faced in Ephesus. Already, men who evidently claimed to be Christians had emerged and were destroying "whole families, teaching things they should not teach for the sake of sordid gain" (v. 11). Their primary motive was money. Titus faced the awesome task of not only discovering leaders and training them to be godly but also of silencing those who were "empty talkers and deceivers" (v. 10).

Paul's Maturity Profile

Two paragraphs in Paul's letters to Timothy and Titus give us a powerful profile for testing our maturity levels in Christ (see 1 Tim. 3:1-7; Titus 1:5-10). The following list depicts spiritual qualifications from both letters:

1. Overall spiritual maturity (a well-rounded man)
2. Above reproach (a man of good repute)
3. The husband of one wife (morally pure)

4. Temperate (balanced in words and actions)
5. Prudent (wise and humble)
6. Respectable (good role model)
7. Hospitable (unselfish and generous)
8. Able to teach (communicates sensitively in a non-threatening and nondefensive manner)
9. Not addicted to wine (not addicted to substances)
10. Not self-willed (not self-centered and controlling)
11. Not quick-tempered (void of anger that becomes sinful)
12. Not pugnacious (not abusive)
13. Gentle (sensitive, loving and kind)
14. Peaceable (nonargumentative and nondivisive)
15. Free from the love of money (nonmaterialistic)
16. Manages his own household well (a good husband and father)
17. Loving what is good (pursues godly activities)
18. Just (wise, discerning, nonprejudiced and fair)
19. Devout (holy, devoted to God)
20. Self-controlled (disciplined)

Goals for Every Christian Man

When you first look at the list of spiritual qualifications in Paul's two letters, you might conclude that Paul was exclusively outlining qualifications for men who serve in pastoral and teaching positions in the Church. Not so! While Paul was outlining criteria for selecting leaders, he was in essence saying, "Timothy, if a man wants to become a spiritual leader, that's great. Just make sure he's a mature man, and here's how you can determine if he measures up to God's standards as a Christian."

In other words, some men will possess these qualities to serve as spiritual leaders. Some men will feel called to carry on this kind of ministry and others will not. The qualities, however, are goals for every Christian man. Paul simply pulled together several qualities he and other authors mentioned elsewhere in the New Testament and then compiled a marvelous profile for measuring our maturity levels in Christ.

An Exciting Challenge

As you evaluate your life, be on guard against discouragement. See this as a great opportunity to become the man of God you really want to become. Remember that Satan may be looking over your shoulder and whispering in your ear, "You'll never become that kind of man. You've blown it too badly. There's no hope for you. You'll never break out of your old sin patterns."

When Satan tempts you with these thoughts, meditate on these words:

Submit therefore to God. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Draw near to God and He will draw near to you (Jas. 4:7-8).

Listen to God's voice, which is saying, "I love you no matter what you've done, no matter where you are in your spiritual growth, no matter what your feelings. I'm on your side. I have not rejected you. You are My child. You can become a man of God, and I'm here to help you."

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Why do some men grow rapidly in their Christian faith once they become believers, and why do others struggle, seemingly taking as many steps backward as forward? Note: Think of examples you can sensitively share. If you feel free to, share your own personal experiences.
- As you look back at Paul's Maturity Profile, what would you consider to be your areas of strength?
- As you look at the same profile, in what one specific area would you like to grow the most? Can you identify the factor or factors that are holding you back?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 2

Building a Good Reputation

A Conversation I'll Never Forget

When my oldest daughter, Renee, was about eight years old, I was preparing a message on “the family.” Consequently, I asked her if she would mind listening to what I was planning to share with the congregation the following Sunday. I also asked her if she would give me feedback on how my life as her father measured up to what I was going to share with the people in the church.

I still remember Renee climbing up beside me on the couch in our living room. It was indeed an intimate moment. I began to share my message point by point. She listened intently, and then I noticed about halfway through my presentation she began fighting tears. It was a tender moment. I asked her directly if something in my life troubled her. I'll never forget her answer. “Just one thing, Daddy,” she responded softly and sensitively, as if she were fearful she'd hurt my feelings. “What's that, honey?” I asked her. “Well,” she responded, “sometimes when I talk to you, you don't listen.”

Message received! My little daughter was talking about one of my weaknesses, my tendency not to listen when my children speak. This was particularly true when they were young. In that special and vulnerable moment, Renee told me that at times she tried to share with me some things that were really important to her. She was also saying she knew by the look in my eyes that my mind was a thousand miles away, solving a problem at the office, thinking through a message outline or simply concentrating on my own agenda, not realizing she had been waiting all day long to tell me something exciting that was happening in her own life.

I wish I could say that Renee's comments that day totally changed me. Through the years, I have had to fight the temptation not to listen when my children speak. How easy it is to take those who are closest to us for granted. They'll understand, we conclude. For the most part, they do understand. But it still hurts them, and it is still a weakness in our personalities that also hurts our reputations.

One thing is for certain—that experience with my little daughter made me aware of my weakness and helped me set some new goals that hopefully have changed me from that day forward. I have never forgotten that experience, and I have worked hard to be a better father.

An Overarching Quality

When Paul stated that a mature man is “above reproach” (1 Tim. 3:2), fortunately he was not referring to perfection. Rather, he was simply stating that we should have a good reputation.

Paul listed this quality first in both his first letter to Timothy (see 3:2) and in the letter he wrote to Titus (see 1:6-7). He had a reason. It's an overarching characteristic. It's a summary quality, the result of living out the other qualities mentioned in these two lists.

Find Us Seven Good Men

Having a good reputation is not a new idea in the New Testament. When the Church faced its first organizational problem in Jerusalem, the apostles recommended that “seven men of good reputation” be selected to help solve the problem of food distribution among the Grecian widows (see Acts 6:3).

The apostles knew that they would only make the problem worse if they delegated this task to men who were not respected in the Christian community. People wouldn’t trust them; they would second-guess their every move. The people may accuse them of favoritism. These reasons are why the apostles asked the Grecian Jews themselves to select these men. They alone would be aware of those who had this kind of integrity.

Well Spoken Of

When Paul returned to Timothy’s hometown on his second missionary journey, he no doubt met this young man face-to-face, perhaps for the first time. But Timothy’s reputation preceded him. Luke recorded that “he was well spoken of by the brethren who were in Lystra and Iconium” (Acts 16:2). In other words, Timothy was “above reproach,” even as a relatively new Christian.

Note three things about Timothy’s reputation:

1. People talked about this young man—not negatively but positively.
2. More than one person talked about Timothy.
3. People talked about Timothy in both Lystra and Iconium—that is, in more than one location. He had a good reputation both at home and away from home.

What we know from Timothy’s story gives us a very important principle. When understanding and applying what Paul meant by the quality of being above reproach, we must remember that people who have good reputations create positive conversations among a variety of people in various locations.

What Are Others Saying About You?

For most of us as Christian men, it takes time to build a good reputation. Whatever our background, we should make it a goal. It should happen naturally if we're growing and maturing in our Christian lives. Conversely, a Christian who has a poor reputation is demonstrating traits that are not in harmony with Christian principles, nor is his lifestyle in harmony with what people naturally expect from a mature man.

This entire study is designed to help you develop a godly reputation. A good place to start is to determine what people actually think of you right now.

A Question to Get You Started

- Do I get positive feedback from those closest to me (my wife, my children, my friends) that would indicate I have a good reputation?

Remember, feedback from those who do not know you well is not necessarily a good test. Their judgments can be superficial. They may be impressed with your physical appearance, your speaking ability or your "platform" or "public" personality, which may or may not represent who you really are as a person and what you represent.

How Well Do You Know Me?

For example, how well do you know me? Merely reading this book will not give you a true reading about my reputation. You might be impressed with what I say, how I say it or what appears to be a commitment to godly living, but how do you know what I am really like? The truth is, you don't.

The same is true when I go out to speak, particularly among those I've never met before or have only met casually. You see, I could easily fake spirituality. It may surprise you that this is done all the time by well-known Christian personalities. It's easy to be impressed with a person's public personality, which may or may not be what that individual is like in private.

I say this not to make you skeptical or judgmental, but to help you to take a look for yourself. If you really want to know what I am like, you'll have to talk to those who really know me. You will need to ask my wife, who has lived with me for many years. You will need to talk to my children, who grew up in our home and now have homes of their own. You will want to talk to the elders in my church who have ministered with me for a number of years.

How Well Do You Know Yourself?

To personalize this study, you will need to do the same research about yourself. If you really want to know what kind of reputation you have—what people really think of you—ask your own wife (if married), and then give her freedom to answer the question openly and objectively. Ask your children and then give them the freedom to do the same. Ask those who know you well in your church and those who know you in the business world. You'll be amazed at what you'll learn. Threatening? Yes. But it will be well worth it in terms of results.

Some Additional Questions

- Do people seek me out to share their lives with me? Do people trust me with confidential information?
- Do my relationships with people grow deeper and more significant the longer they know me and the closer they get to me? Or do my friendships grow strained and shallow as people learn what I am really like?
- Does my circle of friends grow continually wider and larger? Do an increasing number of people admire and trust me?
- Do people recommend me for significant or difficult tasks without fear of my letting them down?

“Still Water” or a “Bubbly Brook”?

One thing I have learned through the years is that we must be careful in judging people's maturity by the degree to which they project an outgoing personality. “Still water” runs deep, whereas a “bubbly brook” can be shallow. People who appear to have it all together in public are sometimes very different in private. Conversely, others who may be quiet and appear reserved can have enduring qualities that represent a true measure of maturity.

This, of course, is not always true. But when it is true, bubbly people don't wear well on the long haul. The people who are more real—although perhaps more quiet—may be the people you truly want to have as close friends. They do wear well. The more time you spend with these people, the more you'll realize what quality people they are.

Taking the Plunge

If you find it difficult to be objective about the answers to the previous questions or to get started, sit down with your spouse or a close male friend and ask her or him to help you honestly evaluate the answers.

I realize this is a threatening assignment. It's not easy to do. In fact, it's like standing on a cliff getting ready to dive into waters you've never explored before—even though you know of others who have gone before you. As one who has been there, I'd like to encourage you to take the plunge. I assure you that it will change your life and how people feel about you. Being willing to go through this process will in itself begin to positively build your reputation.

My Most Rewarding Assignment

I am often invited to teach at various theological schools—particularly in the area of church renewal. As an assignment, I ask my students to read through The Measure of a Man with either their spouse or a close friend. I suggest that they ask this person to help them evaluate their lives in the light of the qualities listed in this book. Once they complete the assignment, I then ask them to outline their strengths as well as the areas where they believe they need to grow and improve. Invariably, these students report that this is the most significant and life-changing assignment they have ever completed. The reason, I believe, is obvious. They have come face-to-face with what God says should be the true measure of a man, and they've taken an honest look at where they are in becoming the Christian God wants them to be.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What is the first step we can take as men to determine what people really think of us?
- Are there areas in our lives where we believe people have false views of us and have misjudged our attitudes and actions? Why has this happened? What can we do to correct this misperception without appearing to be defensive?
- Are we aware of any attitudes and actions in our lives right now that are hurting our reputations? What steps can we take immediately to rebuild our reputations in those particular areas?
- What one thing would you like to do immediately to begin to enhance your reputation as a Christian man?

CHAPTER 3

Maintaining Moral Purity

The Power of Sexual Addiction

I remember meeting a young family man several years ago (let's call him "Jose") when I was ministering in a South American country. When he was just a young boy, entering the age of puberty, his father took him to a prostitute and offered her money to teach his son everything there was to know about sex. In addition, the father put this woman on a retainer, so his son could visit her anytime he wished. Hard to imagine? Yes, but it's true and common in that particular culture.

You can predict what happened. Jose became addicted to this kind of lifestyle. Eventually, when he grew older, he decided to get married and have children. Like so many of his friends who grew up in that society, he continued to visit a prostitute regularly, even after he was married. And like so many women in that culture, his wife knew about his extramarital activities. She accepted it, though reluctantly, as normal behavior among men.

Then something very dramatic happened. Jose became a born-again Christian. For the first time, he discovered the biblical standard for morality and marriage. To continue his association with the prostitute, or any woman other than his wife, would be to continue to sin against God as well as his wife and family. Unfortunately, his addiction was so powerful that he continually struggled to measure up to this standard.

When I met Jose, he had been victorious over his sin for several months, thanks to an accountability group. Through Bible study, prayer and understanding his true identity in Jesus Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit—as well as being accountable for his actions—he was finally able to conquer the temptation when he left his office after work. Rather than making his regular visits to a prostitute, he returned home and spent the evenings with his wife and family.

Two Thousand Years Ago

If you can understand the dynamics in this story, you can also understand more clearly what happened regularly in the New Testament culture, especially among Gentiles.

Three-Women Men

In the Roman world, it was common for affluent men to have at least three women in their lives, including their wives. One woman might be a slave girl who lived in the same house or compound who was always available to her master for sexual pleasure. Another woman might be a prostitute down at the pagan temple, which was considered a religious rite in the various pagan religions. The other woman would be the man's wife, the one who would help carry on the family name by giving birth to children and taking the primary responsibility for rearing them.

Who could tolerate such behavior? you ask. Good question. But the fact is that these women had little choice about these circumstances. Their very lives and sustenance depended on their full cooperation.

Different Value Systems

Many of us who live in countries that have been deeply influenced by Hebrew-Christian morality find it difficult to comprehend these social dynamics. People who grow up in cultures guided by a different value system from ours, however, come to accept this kind of lifestyle, like it or not.

I remember talking to a young woman from an Eastern country. She related a story similar to the one I have just told. “How can this be?” I asked. She responded, “The women in our society are very tolerant of their husbands’ extramarital behavior.”

This is the kind of culture in which the apostle Paul preached the gospel. And it was in this kind of culture that men came to Christ. For the first time in their lives, these new Christians heard God’s message regarding moral purity: God’s plan for each of them was to have only one woman in their lives—their wife.

God’s Truth Penetrates Culture

Many of these New Testament men had the same problems and temptations in their lives as men who come to Christ in similar cultures today. Although they hear and understand Christ’s message of living morally, changes often come slowly. The power of sexual addiction often controls them, even after they have become believers.

Get the picture? Paul was concerned that a man who did not have victory over sexual immorality should never be appointed to lead others in the Church. Therefore, Paul told Timothy that a spiritual leader must be “the husband of one wife”—or more literally, “a man of one woman.”

If you have difficulty understanding this reality, consider the Corinthians. They tolerated and even bragged about a man who had a sexual relationship with his stepmother, an act of immorality that wasn’t even practiced in the pagan community. Most of the non-Christians in Corinth were licentious and immoral people, but evidently they didn’t engage in this kind of sexual relationship (see 1 Cor. 5:1). How the Corinthian Christians could rationalize this kind of behavior I haven’t a clue, except I know our hearts can deceive us, even as believers. It also demonstrates the continuing influence of a value system that is contrary to Christian morality.

If Christians in the New Testament Church tolerated this kind of degeneracy, it’s not surprising that Paul made sure all believers knew that a man of God—especially a Christian leader—should have only one woman in his life—his wife—and should be faithful to her and her alone.

A Higher Standard Still

Christian morality extends its boundaries beyond the physical act of illegitimate sexual relationships, according to Jesus:

You have heard that it was said, “You shall not commit adultery”; but I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman with lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart (Matt. 5:27-28).

Lust Versus Temptation

“With lust for her” means not only to desire a woman in an illicit sexual relationship but also to think in terms of how to cause it to happen. This differentiates temptation from lust or sin.

I remember the highly publicized statement by former President Jimmy Carter when he occupied the White House. In essence, he stated that he “commits adultery in his heart every day.” Knowing Mr. Carter’s standard of morality, I am confident he misinterpreted what Jesus meant. To be accurate, he should have said he was “sexually tempted every day.” There is a big difference.

Our Sexually Oriented Culture

Most every man, married or single, is sexually tempted. No one can avoid completely the twenty-first-century sensuous messages that emanate from magazine covers, movie ads and television commercials. Add to this the multitude of sensuously dressed women and female exhibitionists who permeate our culture, and it is not difficult to understand why many men are tempted every day of their lives. Perhaps the most devastating development has appeared on the Internet. Explicit pornography is just a click away—and in private.

But to be tempted is not a sin. Temptation, however, can quickly lead to sin. Any man who deliberately enjoys and pursues an illegitimate sexual relationship with a woman in his mind has, in God’s sight, already committed an immoral act. This kind of fantasy world is off limits for a man who desires to follow God fully.

Practical Steps to Moral Purity

When the group of men I initially led through these godly attributes interacted with this particular quality for measuring spiritual maturity, we discussed some practical steps we could take to be men of high moral integrity.

Step 1: Develop Good Communication

A married man who is able to keep his moral house in order and who is able to handle the normal temptations that arise in our contemporary culture is usually a man who has a fulfilling sex life.

Another Corinthian Problem. Paul spoke to this morality problem in 1 Corinthians 7:1-5. He instructed both wives and husbands to meet each other’s sexual needs so that Satan would not lead one or the other into sexual immorality and unfaithfulness.

Many a married man has become involved with another woman, either mentally or physically, because of a wife who is insensitive to his sexual and psychological needs. She may be selfish or even hostile, using sex as a weapon. Or she may just be naive and unaware of the tremendous drives that can be triggered in a man who has faced temptation all day long in the office.

Men Are Also at Fault. Many men are also to blame. They often suffer in silence and do not communicate with their wives, or they may sin against their wives and then blame them for not meeting their needs.

The average Christian woman may know little of the inner problems of men, including her man. First, most women cannot identify with this problem because they, by creation, do not function in their sexual lives physically or psychologically the same as men. Second, if women are not instructed in the differences between the sexes, they may have no way of knowing how significant their roles are in the sexual union. There must be good communication if a wife is to understand and be sensitive.

If He Were Mature, He Wouldn't Be Tempted. Communication, of course, is a two-way street that hopefully leads to mutual listening. The fact that a husband tries to share his needs doesn't guarantee a listening and understanding ear. I remember talking with a woman one day who, along with her husband, was involved in a Bible study with several other couples. The subject of sex surfaced. In the process, the men attempted to communicate their inner struggles in the way they normally think and respond.

Communication is a two-way street that hopefully leads to mutual listening.

In my conversation with this woman, two things became apparent about her reactions to what the men had to say. First, she was highly threatened by the fact that her husband would even be sexually tempted. How could he be? In her mind, for him to even have sexual thoughts about other women was sinful and mental adultery.

Clearly, this woman did not understand the difference between “temptation” and “lust.” In our culture, men have little control over fleeting thoughts. However, we must not allow temptation to lead to the kind of “lust” Jesus described.

Second, I noticed that this woman had no concept whatsoever of how she differed from men in terms of temptation and response to sexual stimuli. She interpreted everything they were trying to communicate in terms of her own psychological and physiological perspectives and reactions.

Considering this woman's tendency to be threatened by her incorrect perceptions, it's easy to see why she had difficulty relating to what the men in this group were trying to communicate. A wife who responds this way when her husband attempts to communicate his struggles might very well close the door indefinitely for any kind of communication to occur. When this happens, the marriage is in serious trouble.

A Personal Story. I remember on one occasion I was traveling and stayed the night in an upscale hotel. I'd had a very busy and successful day in ministry, but when I found myself alone in my room, I noticed the movie advertisements on the top of the television set. It was clear that adult fare was readily available with the push of a button. Frankly, I was tempted. The very titles were designed to stimulate a man's sexual appetite.

At that moment, I picked up the phone and dialed my wife. I shared with her how I was feeling. "Why am I so tempted?" I asked. I'll never forget Elaine's response. "That's easy to understand," she responded with a sympathetic tone in her voice, "You're a man."

We then prayed together and asked God for strength not to yield to this kind of temptation. I remember falling asleep that night reading my Bible, realizing how fortunate I was to have a wife I could talk to—a woman who wasn't threatened and who encouraged me in those times of temptation.

Step 2: Avoid Sexually Stimulating Situations

Men should not set up conflict situations by deliberately exposing themselves to temptation. Several of the men in my initial study group also traveled extensively, and it was their consensus that airport newsstands featuring Playboy, Penthouse, Hustler and a variety of other men's magazines are not conducive to moral purity. Neither are video stores. Most of these places of business specialize in pornography of one sort or another. Furthermore, many hotels are now equipped with in-house movies that feature sexually explicit scenes.

Soft Porn Plays Hardball. Some Christian men rationalize what they watch on TV or the Internet, or what they see in magazines, by avoiding X-rated viewing and limiting their activities to less explicit movies, or what is identified as "soft pornography." However, Dr. Judith Reisman has written a powerful book entitled Soft Porn Plays Hardball that demonstrates the effects this kind of sexual stimulus has on the millions of men who view this adult fare. In her book, Dr. Reisman demonstrates why allegedly innocent "girlie" magazines have done more harm to children, women, men and the family than has hardcore, illegal entertainment. Reisman identifies the ideas of soft porn, which have filtered into advertising, TV, art, music, novels and sex education in schools. She documents how pornography bears an enormous responsibility for the spiraling rate of divorce, venereal disease and abortion, as well as new and deadly forms of sex crimes against women and children. The havoc wreaked on our culture is inestimable, and the family is the prime target.

a desire for communication with God and the study of His Word as much as indiscriminate exposure to

Sadly, Christian men have become addicted to this kind of pornography, which often leads them into more explicit kinds of viewing. And sadder still, the Christian family is not exempt from the damage this inflicts on wives and children.

Pursue Righteousness. A very important principle emerges from the study of Scripture: In the provocative society in which we live, and no matter what our spiritual maturity, we must guard against deliberately exposing ourselves to literature, movies, TV shows, the Internet and activities of any kind that are designed to illegitimately excite and stimulate our sexual natures.

Step 3: Think Right

Men should fortify themselves through regular study of the Word of God and prayer. Nothing dulls a desire for communication with God and the study of His Word as much as indiscriminate exposure to illegitimate sexual stimuli. And nothing is so effective in combating temptation and lust as an effective prayer life and Bible study program. Thus, the apostle Paul wrote,

Finally, brethren, whatever is true, whatever is honorable, whatever is right, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is of good repute, if there is any excellence and if anything worthy of praise, dwell on these things (Phil. 4:8).

What Paul wrote to the Philippians is great criteria by which all of us can evaluate what we read, see and think. Does what we're doing pass this very specific biblical test?

Step 4: Be Accountable

Every Christian man should have at least one other Christian man as an accountability partner. Having an accountability partner or partners has become more and more necessary in the culture in which we live. We must remember, however, that this in itself is no guarantee that there will be true openness and honesty. For example, a pastor I knew well met with another pastor every week. However, he was not honest in his communication. In fact, he circumvented the tough questions we need to ask one another by simply saying, "We're mature men. Let's just talk." Unfortunately, he was having an affair and avoided real accountability. He eventually divorced his wife, married the other woman and left the ministry.

Step 5: Seek Professional Counseling

Men should seek help from a competent Christian counselor if moral problems persist. This is particularly important and absolutely essential if a man has a sexual addiction. In these situations, a man needs someone other than his wife to help him overcome his problem. No matter how mature our marital partners, addictions are threatening to any woman.

Perhaps, as a single man, you are fighting a losing battle with lust. Of all people, you need an understanding friend and helper—a prayer partner, a listener, an adviser. Never share your problems with a single girl or a married woman. That can be lethal. You need a mature man of God who can help you work through your problems.

Points of Action

The following projects are designed to help you maintain a life of moral purity:

- If married, ask your wife to read this chapter on her own. State that your purpose is to form a common basis for discussion.
- Next, discuss the chapter with your wife, using the following questions as guidelines:
  1. How do you as a woman differ from me as a man, especially in your sexual feelings, needs and attitudes?
  2. How do I as a man differ from you as a woman, especially in my sexual feelings, needs and attitudes?
  3. What can each of us do in our attitudes and behavior to better meet each other's needs sexually?
- If single, list three of the greatest problems you face that are related to your sexual nature.

- Study these problems carefully and then honestly answer the following questions:
  1. What am I doing to accentuate these problems?
  2. What can I do on my own to solve these problems?
  3. Can I solve all of these problems alone, or do I need help from a competent counselor?

- If either married or single, pray and ask the Lord to help you find another Christian man who will be your accountability partner.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Why does Paul in both his letters to Timothy and Titus list moral purity—“the husband of one wife”—immediately following “above reproach” (see 1 Tim. 3:2 and Titus 1:6)?
- What are some specific things we can do to maintain moral purity? What has worked in each of our lives? What hasn’t worked?
- What are some things we can do to begin communicating with our wives? How can we be honest without our wives feeling threatened?
- Why do some men have more difficulty in maintaining moral purity?
- How can we avoid sexual addiction? If this is already a problem, how can we overcome it?

Living a Balanced Life

Temperate

This World Is Not Our Real Home!

I was speaking at a special Bible conference one day, and during the coffee break, one of the participants began to talk nervously about the way our society is deteriorating, how things are going from bad to worse. I immediately sensed an unusual amount of fear and insecurity in this person—an obsession with the idea that our nation is falling apart morally, economically and politically. I responded by saying, “If you think it’s bad now, just wait a while.”

Predictably, I didn’t add to this person’s sense of well-being. I could almost hear a gasp, “Oh, God wouldn’t allow that to happen in America, would He?”

“Why not?” I asked. “Why wouldn’t God allow bad things to happen in America? After all, we know from history that every nation that has departed from God’s standard of righteousness has deteriorated and eventually collapsed.”

Frankly, I wasn’t trying to be insensitive. Rather, I wanted to make an important point: Our hope should not be based on how well things are going in our society. According to the Scriptures, we are just “strangers” passing through (1 Pet. 2:11). “Our citizenship is in heaven” (Phil. 3:20). This world is not our real home.

Spiritual and Emotional Stability

This person’s insecure response to the challenges in our society illustrates the opposite of what Paul meant with the word “temperate.” He was describing a man who has a clear focus on life and who doesn’t live in a constant state of anxiety because of world conditions. In other words, a temperate man doesn’t lose his physical, psychological and spiritual orientation. Like all of us, he experiences emotional turmoil and trauma, but through it all he remains stable and steadfast.

A stable man is a temperate man because he knows where history is going. He is aware that God is in control of the universe as well as the affairs of mankind. On the other hand, he knows he is responsible to do all he can to carry out God’s purposes for him in the world. If married, his goal is to be a loving husband, a responsible father and a good provider for his family. He is a faithful employer or employee and a devoted member of his church. His consistent objective is to be a dynamic Christian witness wherever he is by the way he lives and by what he says.

*A temperate man relies on God for a sense of inner peace and security, no matter what is

Put another way, a temperate man doesn't go to extremes. He doesn't get bogged down trying to solve all of the world's problems. At the same time, he does what he can to solve humankind's social ills, but he does so without neglecting his biblical priorities.

A temperate man, then, doesn't go on emotional tangents. He relies on God for a sense of inner peace and security, no matter what is happening in his life. This doesn't mean he never has periods of anxiety, but overall he has a sense of stability. In the words of James, he is not a "double-minded man, unstable in all his ways" (1:8).

A Proper Focus

Today, it's easy for Christians to get sidetracked onto peripheral issues. We can become so obsessed with the problems in our society that we spend most of our time and energy trying to clean up "the outside of the plate" and forget that it's what is on the inside that must be changed.

Don't misunderstand. I love my country, and I'm sure you do, too. I hope it will be strong and secure for years to come. But God never intended for our earthly home to be our source of security. No matter what happens down here on Earth, we have hope in Jesus Christ. He is our true source for stability and security in life.

On the other hand, when I stop and think about what is really happening in our culture, I'm also deeply concerned. I can get particularly anxious when I think about my grandchildren and what they might face in years to come. Yet when I stop to consider that God is still God and that He is in control of the universe and our nation, I once again refocus my thoughts and feelings and get back in balance. We are to be "light" and "salt" in a world that desperately needs Christ.

The greatest contribution we can make is to be everything God wants us to be as individuals, as families and as local churches. We'll then see people come to know Jesus Christ and experience personal salvation. We hope that God will then bring renewal and revival to our nation.

Political Involvement

This does not mean that a temperate man is not a good citizen. All believers should be well informed. We should take every opportunity to voice our opinions through the political process. We should speak out when we have a platform to do so. But at the same time, we must be realistic without being pessimistic. The world loves darkness more than light. Generally, those who have chosen to rely on their own wisdom will not listen to God's wisdom. And if they do not listen, God will judge our nation. Remember that our salvation is secure, no matter what happens around us. Furthermore, God has promised never to leave us or forsake us, regardless of our circumstances (see Heb. 13:5). This is why New Testament Christians can be joyful in the midst of trials and tribulations (see 1 Pet. 1:3-9).

Becoming Temperate

When Paul wrote to the Thessalonians, he outlined for all of us how to become temperate in a fallen world: "Let us be sober [temperate], having put on the breastplate of faith and love, and as a helmet, the hope of salvation" (1 Thess. 5:8).

A Man of Faith

Like men of old, such as Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Moses and others who are cataloged so dramatically in Hebrews 11, a mature man of God steps out and acts on the promises of God. He is a man of faith!

Let Us Run the Race

Notice the faith and action of each of these men:

- "By faith Abel offered . . . a better sacrifice than Cain" (11:4).
- "By faith Noah . . . prepared an ark" (v. 7).
- "By faith Abraham . . . obeyed by going out" (v. 8).
- "By faith Abraham . . . offered up Isaac" (v. 17).
- "By faith Isaac blessed Jacob" (v. 20).
- "By faith [Moses] left Egypt" (v. 27).

All of the Old Testament men listed here "died in faith, without receiving the promises, but having seen them and having welcomed them from a distance, and having confessed that they were strangers and exiles on the earth" (v. 13).

Fix Our Eyes on Jesus

Today, a temperate man believes God and acts on His promises although he doesn't understand what lies ahead on this Earth. He doesn't allow himself to be lulled to sleep but keeps on looking for the second coming of Jesus Christ to deliver him from the wrath to come (see 1 Thess. 5:9). Furthermore, he encourages other believers with this truth and helps build up all members of the Body of Christ by helping them to look forward to that day. By word and example, he practices the exhortation in Hebrews:

Let us also lay aside every encumbrance and the sin which so easily entangles us, and let us run with endurance the race that is set before us, fixing our eyes on Jesus, the author and perfecter of faith (12:1-2).

A Man of Hope

Closely aligned with the quality of faith is hope, which refers to both the object of our faith as well as our present attitude and state of being (see Heb. 11:1).

Our Eternal Inheritance

As the object of our faith, hope refers to our eternal inheritance, which is laid up for us in heaven (see Col. 1:5; 1 Pet. 1:3-4). It's our "hope of salvation" (1 Thess. 5:8), "the hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised long ages ago" (Titus 1:2). All of this will be fulfilled in a special way when we experience "the blessed hope and the appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior, Christ Jesus" (Titus 2:13).

Steadfastness and Stability

The Scriptures also describe hope as a present state of being. A man of hope is steadfast (see 1 Thess. 1:3). He has fixed his hope "on the living God" (1 Tim. 4:10), rather than "on the uncertainty of riches” and the things of this world (6:17). He holds fast the confession of his “hope without wavering” (Heb. 10:23) and has fixed his “hope completely on the grace to be brought . . . at the revelation of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet. 1:13).

A Man of Love

A temperate man is also a man of love (see 1 Thess. 5:8). This, Paul says, is the greatest quality:

But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the greatest of these is love (1 Cor. 13:13).

In Paul’s first letter to the Corinthians, he defines love very specifically:

Love is patient, love is kind and is not jealous; love does not brag and is not arrogant, does not act unbecomingly; it does not seek its own, is not provoked, does not take into account a wrong suffered, does not rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth (13:4-6).

Love, then, is really the capstone for faith, because love “believes all things” (v. 7). It is also the capstone for hope, because love “hopes all things” (v. 7). Furthermore, love is the greatest, because it “never fails” (v. 8).

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you develop the quality of temperance.

Some Probing Questions

Answer the following questions as honestly as you can.

- How strong is my faith in God and His Word? Do I really believe He exists and that Jesus Christ is coming again? If I do, how is my faith revealed in my actions?
- How aware am I of the hope of my calling (see Eph. 1:18)? How fully do I understand “the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the surpassing greatness of His power toward us who believe” (vv. 18-19)? Have I fixed my hope on the things of this world or on eternal values (see Matt. 6:33)?
- Am I a man of love? How well do I measure up to the criteria described in 1 Corinthians 13? Am I patient? Am I kind? Am I generous? Am I humble? Am I courteous? Am I unselfish? Am I controlled? Am I pure in motives? Am I sincere?

Some Practical Suggestions

Proceed to develop your faith, hope and love. Here are nine suggestions:

1. Develop a plan for both personal and group Bible study and prayer. Remember “faith comes from hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ” (Rom. 10:17).
2. Learn to claim the promises of God’s Word.
3. Interact with mature Christians. Seek advice and wisdom from other members of the Body of Christ.
4. In times of conflict, learn to submit and ask God what He is trying to teach you.
5. Set biblical priorities.
6. Discern what is temporal and what is eternal.
7. Verbalize praise and thanksgiving to God for loving and saving us.
8. Get plenty of rest and relaxation. Remember that it is easy to lose perspective when we are mentally and emotionally exhausted. (Read the story of Elijah in 1 Kings 18:1—19:8. Note particularly Elijah’s loss of perspective in 19:1-4. Notice also God’s solution in 19:5-8.)
9. Read biographies of great Christians.<sup>1</sup>

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- How can we keep balance in our lives when we face so many pressures in our changing society?
- How can we determine if we are getting too caught up in the issues in our society? How can we determine if we are not active enough in addressing these issues?
- How can we help our pastor maintain balance in these areas?
- How can we determine if we are growing in faith, hope and love?

Demonstrating Wisdom

“The Wise in Heart Shall Be Called Prudent” (Prov. 16:21, KJV)

I had the privilege of knowing the late Dr. William Culberson, who served for a number of years as president of Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, Illinois. I served on the faculty for 13 years, and during that time I not only had many personal conversations with Dr. Culberson, but I also observed his actions and reactions in a variety of situations. I sat with him in hundreds of faculty meetings, listening to his sage advice and wise comments. I heard him open the Word of God in chapel sessions each week, making the Scriptures practical and applicable to our lives, as faculty members and as students. I played hours of volleyball on our faculty team, sometimes with him and sometimes against him. There is no activity that reveals a man’s true character as does intense athletic competition.

As I reflect on my associations with Dr. Culberson, I remember a very wise man. The late Dr. Wilbur Smith, who served with Dr. Culberson on a special Bible translation team, once commented that this man’s greatest strength was to be able to listen to everyone express opinions and then give the correct answer with clarity and great wisdom. Dr. Smith’s comment reminds me of the following Proverb:

A wise man will hear and increase in learning (Prov. 1:5).

Sound Judgment

One of my favorite passages of Scripture explaining what Paul had in mind when he used the word “prudent” to describe maturity is in his letter to the Romans:

For through the grace given to me I say to everyone among you not to think more highly of himself than he ought to think; but to think so as to have sound judgment [to think soberly, sensibly or prudently], as God has allotted to each a measure of faith (12:3).

Paul was concerned that we have a proper view of ourselves in relationship to God and to other Christians (see Rom. 12:4-8). Evidently, some believers in Rome—as well as in Corinth (see 1 Cor. 12:14-27)—had an overly exalted view of their positions in the Body of Christ. Some thought they were God’s “special gift” to the Church. Consequently, Paul exhorted them to “be devoted to one another in brotherly love; give preference to one another in honor” (Rom. 12:10), rather than put each other down while they built themselves up.

More than any other characteristic of maturity, Paul related this concept to all members of the Body of Christ. Within a span of five verses of Scripture, he instructed Titus to exhort older men, older women, younger women and younger men to be “sensible” or “prudent” (Titus 2:2-6).

Recognizing Prudence

Humility

A prudent man is a humble man. He has a proper view of himself, and he is keenly aware of one basic thing: All that he has (his gifts, abilities and possessions) is from God. Without Him, he could not speak, write, walk, make decisions or breathe. He understands and practices what Paul wrote to the Philippians:

Do nothing from selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others (2:3-4).

Gratitude

A prudent man also has a proper view of the grace of God. He realizes that he is lost without Christ and that all of his human abilities and achievements are useless in winning any favor with God. He understands that “while we were yet sinners” (Rom. 5:8) God in His boundless love sent His Son to die for lost humanity.

Paul set the example in demonstrating this kind of prudence. Though he was “circumcised the eighth day,” though he was “of the nation of Israel” and “of the tribe of Benjamin,” and not only “a Hebrew of Hebrews” but also “a Pharisee,” Paul yet “counted [all of these human accomplishments] as loss for the sake of Christ” (Phil. 3:5-7).

A prudent man goes to his knees in humble and prayerful adoration, and then rises to a

new level of righteous and holy living.

Paul was also disciplined and taught to live a godly life by God's marvelous grace. Writing to Titus, Paul underscored this point:

For the grace of God has appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us to deny ungodliness and worldly desires and to live sensibly [prudently], righteously and godly in the present age (2:11-12).

Prayerful

A prudent man knows how to pray in the will of God. The apostle Peter wrote, "Be of sound judgment [prudent] and sober spirit for the purpose of prayer" (1 Pet. 4:7). An attitude of pride and an inaccurate view of God's grace lead to bad judgments and immature thinking in our prayer lives. A prudent man goes to his knees in humble and prayerful adoration, and then rises to a new level of righteous and holy living.

Meekness Is Not Weakness

Having a correct perspective regarding our place in God's family does not mean we should be withdrawn and inhibited. It doesn't mean we should lack self-confidence and be burdened with a sense of worthlessness.

Timothy apparently had a problem in this area of his life. He felt intimidated by those who opposed God's work. Paul charged Timothy never to "be ashamed" (2 Tim. 1:8) either of the Lord or of the Lord's servants. Thus, Paul wrote to Timothy:

For God has not given us a spirit of timidity, but of power and love and discipline [sophronismos—of a sound mind, KJV] (v. 7).

What Paul wrote to Timothy applies to all of us. As Christians, we should never be ashamed or intimidated. If we are truly prudent, we'll recognize that we are unworthy to be called children of God and members of the family of God. On the other hand, we can stand straight with our shoulders back and our heads held high. When we do, we have achieved that divine balance in our lives between being men whose gifts and abilities God can use and men who give all glory and honor to Jesus Christ.

Paul's Example

The apostle Paul never hesitated to commend himself when he was falsely accused and belittled. At the same time, however, he made sure he had pure motives and that these motives were understood—that he was defending himself because of what God had done in his life.

This is clear in Paul’s second letter to the Corinthians. Some people questioned his apostleship as well as his motives. Thus, he wrote, “For if we are beside ourselves, it is for God; if we are of sound mind [prudent], it is for you” (5:13). We might paraphrase Paul’s comments as follows:

You may think we are bragging and are proud. If it appears that way to you, it is really because of what God has accomplished in our lives. We are only glorifying the work of God in our own experiences. In other words, we want you to see us as sober, prudent and sensible men—men who are humbly acknowledging that we are what we are because of God’s marvelous grace (see vv. 11-12).

Modeling Prudence Today

Earlier, we noted that the apostle Paul instructed Titus to “urge the young men to be sensible [sophroneo—prudent]” (Titus 2:6). Paul then described in greater detail what he meant.

In all things show yourself to be an example of good deeds, with purity in doctrine, dignified, sound in speech which is beyond reproach, so that the opponent will be put to shame, having nothing bad to say about us (vv. 7-8).

The Only Way to Learn

Some biblical truths can be taught with words alone, such as who Jesus is, how to be saved and many other Bible doctrines. But some things must be taught by both instruction and example. In fact, without modeling, some words are meaningless. “Prudence” is one of those words. This is why Paul told Titus not only to teach young men to be prudent, but also to demonstrate this quality in his own life. They need real-life examples.

An Unforgettable Conversation

I had a very meaningful experience one day while I was thinking about the concept in this chapter. I was having breakfast with my son, Kenton, who at the time was a sophomore at Baylor University. Our conversation reached a deeper level than ever before. We were talking about a series of letters I had written to him, which I began to write when he was in high school. These letters to my son were based on Paul’s words to Timothy:

Don’t let anyone look down on you because you are young, but set an example for the believers in speech, in life, in love, in faith and in purity (1 Tim. 4:12, NIV).

I wrote seven letters in all, and each letter was based on one of the qualities outlined in this verse. At one point in our conversation about these letters, Kenton shared with me something he had never said before. “Dad,” he said, “I want you to know you’re my model, and I want to be like you.”

I had two reactions to Kenton’s statement. First, I was overwhelmed with gratitude to God. It was a humbling experience.

Second, Kenton's comment caused me to continue to evaluate my attitudes and actions. His words have stayed with me. When I'm tempted to violate the will of God in my life—and I am tempted, as is every other Christian man—I think about my son's statement, "Dad, I want to be like you." I try to envision Kenton—and now my grandsons as well—sitting or standing beside me, listening, observing and taking mental, emotional and spiritual notes on my behavior.

Another Memory

As I penned these words regarding my son's comments, my mind drifted back to an experience I had as a young teenager. I had a close friend whose father invited me to join him and his son on a trip to Chicago. For a young farm boy from a small town in Indiana, this was a very exciting experience. The one thing I'll never forget is indelibly impressed on my mind. This father took his son (and me) to see a movie and a "live show" in a theater on State Street. In fact, the father had to lie about our ages to get us in.

Need I say more! What a tragic example for my friend and me. Here was a father who deliberately introduced his son and another impressionable young man (me) to a world of sinful behavior we heretofore knew nothing about. Thankfully, I became a Christian a short time later, which kept me from following the wrong path. But I've often wondered about my friend, who eventually married and had children of his own. What kind of example has he been to his son?

We Can't Be Perfect

At this point, I need to clarify something highly important. Paul is not teaching us that we have to be perfect. My son said something else to me that morning. "Dad," he explained, "I know you make mistakes. And so do I. But you're still my model."

This comment ministered to me as much, if not more, than his initial statement. We do make mistakes. Those who associate closely with me, especially my children, know that more than anyone. It encouraged me to know that Kenton saw beyond my mistakes and my sins to my heart in order to see who I really wanted to be.

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you become a prudent man—a person who is wise and balanced in judgment. More specifically, it means you must develop a proper self-image.

The Peril of the Pendulum

As Christians, it's easy to go to extremes. We can see ourselves as nothing or we can get caught up in an exalted view of ourselves. The more immature we are, the more we vacillate between these two attitudes.

Both extremes are improper. On the one hand, we should recognize that all we are and have is because of God's grace. On the other hand, we should understand that God has given us special abilities, and He wants us to use those abilities to accomplish great things for Him.

- Recognize that there are various reasons for this imbalance to exist and persist. The following checklist will help you to begin to isolate the reasons for this imbalance.

1. An unfortunate series of circumstances beyond human control
  - ___ Loss of a parent or parents
  - ___ Bad experiences in school or in the neighborhood
  - ___ Negative influences from family and friends
  - ___ Hereditary factors or physical illness that have created feelings of inferiority
2. Incorrect teaching
  - ___ You've been taught for so long that you are worthless that you actually feel and believe you are worthless.
  - ___ You've tried so hard to eliminate self that you have downgraded your self-image and the image of God in you.
  - ___ You have an incorrect view of forgiveness and being right with God. For example, you try to become nothing so that God will accept you.
Remember: You can do nothing to become right with God. You cannot even become nothing. You must come to God just as you are and accept His free gift of salvation.
3. Parents who were unwise
  - ___ They withheld praise and attention, creating in you an unnatural thirst and desire for recognition.
  - ___ They gave you too much of a prominent position, creating an emotional need always to be first in line and in the limelight.

Too Little or Too Much

As a pastor, I have discovered that Christian parents at times withhold praise and attention from their children in fear they will create a prideful attitude. In actuality, when we withhold positive feedback, we create the problem we try so hard to avoid. This is a sure-fire way to rear a child who will be starved for attention. Ironically, this child will also have a pride problem later in life, because he or she did not learn how to emotionally handle success. Consequently, it is far better to give too much attention than too little. This problem is much easier to correct.

- If you have isolated the source of your problem, interact with someone you trust—someone who is wise and prudent.

Ask this person to help you develop perspective and to pray with you about your struggle.

- Set up specific goals for your life to develop a proper self-image.

Be careful not to rationalize immature behavior on the basis of past circumstances and experiences. Become a responsible person. Never blame your problems on someone else, including your parents, though they may have contributed to the problems.

Ask God to help you overcome your problems. Remember that the Word of God says:

But if any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, who gives to all generously and without reproach, and it will be given to him (Jas. 1:5).

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What passage of Scripture referred to in this chapter meant the most to you? Why?
- What specific struggles face us in being men of wisdom?
- How can we be meek in our relationships without being weak?
- What personal experiences can we share with each other that will help us to encourage one another, pray for one another, love each other more and build up one another?
- What is your special need for prayer?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 6

Making God's Truth Attractive

Respectable

Cosmetics to the Gospel

When my family and I moved to Dallas, we built a home in the White Rock section of Dallas, which posed a problem. Because we built our house on rock, we had a terrible time putting in a lawn.

I remember one day in August when it was about 105 degrees. I was perspiring profusely while I was picking up rocks and trying to prepare the lot for topsoil. Barbie, an eight-year-old neighbor, had been watching me for several days. As she stood there sucking on her lollipop, she made a comment I'll never forget: "My mommy says you work awfully hard for a preacher!"

I've laughed about this little girl's comment many times. But I'm also grateful. You see, I knew I had impressed her parents and perhaps changed their view of "preachers." This was an important step in becoming a witness for Christ. As some neighbors enjoyed saying, they didn't see me as a typical "man of the cloth."

The Greek Word Kosmios

The New Testament word kosmios is variously translated in 1 Timothy 3:2 as being "of good behavior," "well behaved" or "respectable." In essence, it's speaking of a man who is living a well-ordered life.

Our English word "cosmetics" comes from the same word. We see this connection when the verb kosmeo is translated "to adorn." For example, when Paul wrote to Titus, he urged slaves "to be subject to their own masters in everything" (2:9). They were "to be well-pleasing, not argumentative" (v. 9), and they were not to steal from their masters (see v. 10). Rather, they were to "adorn [kosmeo] the doctrine of God our Savior in every respect" (v. 10). In essence, their lives were to be like cosmetics to the gospel.

Cosmetics, of course, are designed to make us attractive, to look and smell good. In other words, when non-Christians see respectability in our lives, hopefully they'll be attracted to the gospel message and to Jesus Christ.

A Modern Parable

A certain man and his wife in a particular city bought a home and moved in. This man was a Christian minister, and the man from whom he purchased the house was also a Christian minister.

In a few short days, it became apparent that some neighbors were disturbed that another minister had moved next door. For behold, the former minister had paid little attention to the outward appearance of his property. He allowed the grass to grow long, and when he did mow, certain sections were left uncut. And where he mowed, mounds of dry grass accumulated. Dandelions grew rampant, and other assorted weeds became a permanent part of the landscape. This man had planted no trees or shrubs, but allowed his large and spacious lawn to become a hay field.

It just so happened that certain neighbors in this particular community paid special attention to the outward appearances of their homes. True, many were not Christians, and they were materialistic. For some, their houses and their lawns appeared to be their gods.

Regardless of their own motives, these neighbors were totally turned off by this minister's irresponsibility, lack of orderliness and unwillingness to do his part to add to the natural beauty of the neighborhood. Consequently, the minister moving in after the former one found great communication barriers with his non-Christian neighbors. They were utterly convinced that Christians (ministers particularly) are a bad lot—irresponsible about keeping up their property and unconcerned how this neglect affects their neighbors. The apostle Paul would identify this man as one who is not respectable.

The Interpretation

This parable is true. I was the man who bought this property from a minister and faced the communication barriers. Because of this man's reputation in the community, it took my wife and me many months to build trust with our neighbors. The way we accomplished it, however, was simple. Yet, it wasn't easy, because we had to prioritize our budget and do a lot of hard work.

*A respectable man is a man who lives in such a way
so that his total life adorns the teachings

What we needed to do first was apparent. We mowed regularly and sprayed the lawn to kill the weeds. Rather than fix up the inside of the house, we postponed that project and allocated money to buy shrubs and trees. And because of our limited budget, we dug the holes ourselves and planted everything. It was a huge task, but we got the job done. Would you believe that when the neighbors—particularly those who resented us the most—saw our efforts, they warmed up and became relatively good friends?

I'm thankful for this experience because it taught me a great lesson. If as Christians we choose to live in a particular neighborhood, we're also responsible to keep up our property so that we can be a good testimony to those who live there. This is part of being respectable.

Walking Worthy of Our Calling

A respectable man is a man who lives in such a way so that his total life adorns the teachings of the Bible. Whether it's his dress, his speech, the appearance of his home, his office or the way he does business—all are to be in harmony with biblical principles and doctrines. Because God is a God of order, a man of God should also be orderly and proper. He should be a Christian gentleman in every area of his life.

When I think of being a man who lives a respectable life, I think of what Paul wrote to the Ephesian Christians about our Christian walk:

Therefore, I, the prisoner of the Lord, implore you to walk in a manner worthy of the calling with which you have been called (Eph. 4:1).

Paul followed this general exhortation with the following specific exhortations:

- So this I say, and affirm together with the Lord, that you walk no longer just as the Gentiles also walk, in the futility of their mind (v. 17).
- Therefore be imitators of God, as beloved children; and walk in love, just as Christ also loved you and gave Himself up for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God as a fragrant aroma (5:1-2).
- Therefore do not be partakers with them; for you were formerly darkness, but now you are Light in the Lord; walk as children of Light (vv. 7-8).
- Therefore be careful how you walk, not as unwise men but as wise, making the most of your time, because the days are evil (vv. 15-16).

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you develop the quality of being respectable.

Ask Probing Questions

Use the following questions to evaluate your lifestyle openly and honestly before God:

- What about my external appearance? Does it measure up to what is considered proper both biblically and culturally?
Remember: It's important to keep these two in balance. Usually, but not always, culture itself makes certain demands on people. Non-Christians also have certain expectations regarding what is appropriate and what is inappropriate. As Christians we must take into consideration cultural expectations and at the same time not violate biblical principles and teachings.
- What are my motives regarding what I wear? Am I attracting attention to myself or to the Lord Jesus Christ who lives within me?
Remember: You can dress elaborately to attract attention to yourself, or you can be shabby, unkempt or unclean to attract attention to yourself. Both lead to a lack of respectability.
- What about the house I live in? Did I buy it to impress people or did I buy it to glorify Jesus Christ?
Remember: This question, as all of these questions, has to be handled individually. Don't judge others. Examine your own heart. Size, cost and location are not the most important issues; your motives are.
- What about my speech? Do I use words to build up others or to build up myself? Do I glorify God with my words or do I glorify myself? Furthermore, is my speech becoming to a Christian? Does it adorn the doctrine of God?

Listen to Yourself

Reflect on the following illustrations to see what you can learn about yourself.

On one occasion, we were constructing a new building for one of the churches where I served as founding pastor. One of the men on our executive team was a general contractor, and he volunteered to oversee the construction. We also hired another man from the church to do the on-site supervision.

One day the man who oversaw the day-to-day operations came to me expressing deep concern. The general contractor (the man on our executive committee) was using expletives on the job site that were not becoming to any Christian man, let alone one who was in a leadership position in the church. As the senior pastor, I felt responsible to confront the issue. It was a difficult and painful experience for me, because the man chose to resign from his leadership role in the church. What made the experience even more difficult was that this man was also my friend.

Two Different Personalities. Since that experience, I've discovered other businessmen who publicly claim to be Christians and yet live this kind of dichotomous life. They never use this kind of language around their families or close friends, but once they enter their business environment, they become different personalities. Somehow they justify their language as being necessary to win respect. Sadly, they lose it.

A Mark of Insecurity. Frankly, I have concluded that many men use bad language because they're insecure. This becomes their way of covering up their feelings of inferiority. This became particularly obvious to me one day when I was sitting in a graduate-school classroom taking a course in statistics. The professor went to great lengths to scribble extensive and complicated formulas on the chalkboard. The man sitting beside me happened to be rather proficient in statistics. In fact, he was working on his second Ph.D. degree and had shared with me privately that some of the formulas the professor was using weren't accurate. This day, the student could contain himself no longer. He graciously but directly questioned the professor's accuracy.

I'll never forget the verbal explosion that followed. In the twinkling of an eye, the professor's language changed. His expletives were shocking even to a class filled with people who didn't claim to be Christians.

As I reflect on what unfolded that day, it became apparent that my friend had threatened the professor in the worst way. Rather than admitting his error, he tried to cover up his insecurity with bad language. Unfortunately, some Christian men do the same.

Intense Anger. Anger can also cause a man to use bad language. Talk to any professional football player about what happens on the field when tempers flair. Bad language and anger go hand in hand.

Frequently, however, insecurity and anger run on the same track, which leads to double trouble. Insecurity often causes anger, which can cause a verbal explosion that is anything but edifying.

Check Yourself

Use the following scriptural exhortations as a checklist to determine the degree of respectability you have with both Christians and non-Christians.

Check those areas where you believe you are particularly strong (√) and mark those areas where you need to improve (X).

Your Business Life

___ But we urge you, brethren, to excel still more, and to make it your ambition to lead a quiet life and attend to your own business and work with your own hands, just as we commanded you, so that you will behave properly toward outsiders and not be in any need (1 Thess. 4:10-12).

___ Whatever you do, do your work heartily, as for the Lord rather than for men; knowing that from the Lord you will receive the reward of the inheritance. It is the Lord Christ whom you serve (Col. 3:23-24).

___ Those who have believers as their masters must not be disrespectful to them because they are brethren, but must serve them all the more, because those who partake of the benefit are believers and beloved (1 Tim. 6:2).

Your Social Life

___ Whether, then, you eat or drink or whatever you do, do all to the glory of God. Give no offense either to Jews or to Greeks or to the church of God; just as I also please all men in all things, not seeking my own profit but the profit of the many, so that they may be saved (1 Cor. 10:31-33).

___ Conduct yourselves with wisdom toward outsiders, making the most of the opportunity. Let your speech always be with grace, as though seasoned with salt, so that you will know how you should respond to each person (Col. 4:5-6).

___ Keep your behavior excellent among the Gentiles, so that in the thing in which they slander you as evildoers, they may because of your good deeds, as they observe them, glorify God in the day of visitation (1 Pet. 2:12).

___ Submit yourselves for the Lord's sake to every human institution, whether to a king as the one in authority, or to governors as sent by him for the punishment of evildoers and the praise of those who do right. For such is the will of God that by doing right you may silence the ignorance of foolish men (vv. 13-15).

Your Church Life

___ Only conduct yourselves in a manner worthy of the gospel of Christ, so that whether I come and see you or remain absent, I will hear of you that you are standing firm in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel (Phil. 1:27).

___ So then let us pursue the things which make for peace and the building up of one another (Rom. 14:19).

___ Do nothing from selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others (Phil. 2:3-4).

___ But as for you, speak the things which are fitting for sound doctrine (Titus 2:1).

Evaluate

From this study, isolate areas in your life where you need to improve.

Translate those areas into goals and then take action to reach those goals. For example, if you are a person who never gets to work on time, make it your goal to get an early start. Concentrate on this goal until you have developed a new habit.

From this study, pray and ask God to help you achieve those goals.

Realize, however, that prayer alone will not enable you to achieve goals. You must act as a responsible human being. As someone once said, we must "put feet to our prayers."

Remember: Bad habits are hard to break, but we must break them if we are to become respectable and to be a good reflection of the life of Jesus Christ.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What do you think about the conclusion that some men use bad language because they are insecure or angry?

- What other reasons may cause men to resort to this kind of communication?
- What can we do to become consistent Christians in all areas of our lives? If we have lost respect, how can we regain it?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 7

Sharing Our Resources

Hospitable

A Generous Act of Love

A shock wave circled the globe as five missionaries lay dead on the banks of the Curaray River in Ecuador, murdered by savage Auca Indians. The year was 1956. I was a young professor at Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, and I remember that dreadful moment. But I also remember what happened two years later. Rachael Saint, a sister of one of the martyred men, along with Dayuma, a runaway Auca Indian girl, courageously walked back into the tribe under God's guidance and protection. The result has been no less than earth-shattering.

Rachael spent years living among the tribe. Under the auspices of Wycliffe Bible Translators, she learned the language, reduced it to writing, taught the people how to read and worked to place the completed New Testament in their hands. This saint among savages saw all of her brother's killers convert to Jesus Christ and three of those men pastor Auca churches.

During the time Rachael lived among the Auca tribe, she had no running water, bathroom facilities, stove or conveniences. At the age of 72, she spent two hours a day just boiling water, valuable time she could have spent completing her translation work.

I also remember when I got word that a crew of nine men from Fellowship Bible Church of San Antonio, an extension of our ministry in Dallas, flew to this remote jungle camp to spend 10 days constructing facilities to lighten Rachael's load so that the job of translation could be finished on time. The materials for the project were flown into the jungle by Missionary Aviation Fellowship and constructed on-site by these nine men who personally raised the money to complete the project.

Practicing Hospitality

This story is a contemporary illustration of applying Paul's exhortations in Romans 12:13 (NIV), "Share with God's people who are in need. Practice hospitality."

The word "hospitable" means being generous and caring for others. That is why we call our medical centers "hospitals." They are places where we can help people who are physically and emotionally hurting. However, the Church is also to be a hospital—not only an environment for spiritual healing, but also a place to meet one another's physical needs.

It Started in Jerusalem

The circumstances in Jerusalem when the Church was founded were, of course, unusual. Thousands of God-fearing Jews had come from throughout the New Testament world to worship the Lord for a special 50-day celebration. On the fiftieth day, the Holy Spirit descended on a small group of believers who were praying in the Upper Room.

The Church was born, and thousands were converted to Jesus Christ. Because the converts did not understand God's total plan, they stayed in Jerusalem to see what would happen next. At this point, we see the greatest demonstration of hospitality in the history of Christianity. Luke recorded:

For there was not a needy person among them, for all who were owners of land or houses would sell them and bring the proceeds of the sales and lay them at the apostles' feet, and they would be distributed to each as any had need (Acts 4:34-35).

This New Testament example illustrates an ongoing practice throughout Church history. Unusual circumstances will always create special needs among God's people. In New Testament days, it was sometimes a famine, such as the one faced by the Jerusalem Christians several years later. In this instance, the church in Antioch came to the rescue (see Acts 11:25-30). Later, Paul faced special needs because of his imprisonment in Rome, and the Philippian church rose to the occasion (see Phil. 4:10-20).

The Need Is Still with Us

Special needs emerge in the same way today, and when they do, God's people should respond to those needs. In our own church, we have a "love fund" for this purpose—a special account we carefully monitor to make sure it is used to show hospitality. It may also involve using our homes and resources to minister to others, just to share love and friendship.

Paul emphasized the same point in his letter to the Ephesians when he wrote:

He who steals must steal no longer; but rather he must labor, performing with his own hands what is good, so that he will have something to share with one who has need (4:28).

Without Complaint

The basis of hospitality is true Christian love. Peter made this point clear when he wrote, "Above all, keep fervent in your love for one another, because love covers a multitude of sins" (1 Pet. 4:8). He then followed this powerful admonition by saying, "Be hospitable to one another without complaint" (v. 9).

Unselfish motives are the true test of Christian love. We are not to respond to others' needs because it is our responsibility or simply a duty. Rather, it is to come from our hearts. We are not to love others for reward, but because God first loved us.

Rewards will be granted. You cannot truly reach out to others without eventually receiving. But receiving should not be a part of our basic motivation in demonstrating hospitality.

Saint Francis of Assisi captured this concept of unselfish motives better than anyone I know.

Lord, make me an instrument of Your peace;
Where there is hatred let me sow love;
where there is injury, pardon;
where there is doubt, faith;

where there is despair, hope;
where there is darkness, light;
where there is sadness, joy.

O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console;
to be understood as to understand;
to be loved as to love.
For it is in giving that we receive;
it is in pardoning that we are pardoned;
and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life.<sup>1</sup>

A Word of Caution

As Christians, we are told to even “show hospitality to strangers” (Heb. 13:2). However, we also must be careful in attempting to practice the kind of hospitality described in Hebrews. Some people make it a consistent practice to deceive believers and take advantage of their generosity. Through the years, I’ve experienced this kind of deceit on numerous occasions, and I must admit that I’ve made some bad decisions. In short, I’ve been taken.

One day, I was sitting in my favorite doughnut shop. Next to me was a woman my wife and I had tried to befriend and had gotten to know well. Her life had been a disaster. She was a divorcee and had several children. Her comments made it clear she had been “living around” with guys she had met.

As I came into the doughnut shop that morning, I sat down beside her and began to plan my day. At first, we exchanged hellos as we normally did, and then I went about my personal business.

Several minutes later, she leaned over and quietly asked me if I could lend her 20 dollars to fill her car with gas. “I’ll pay it back,” she said, “as soon as I get my next paycheck.”

I’m a compassionate person at heart, so I reached for my billfold. I then realized I had only enough money with me to pay for a doughnut and a cup of coffee. “I’m sorry,” I said, “I don’t have any money except enough to pay my bill, but if I did, I’d help you out.”

I probably would have lent her the money, and I probably would never have gotten the money back. That, of course, would not have been a disaster, but had I helped her, it probably would have only reinforced her irresponsibility.

Later, when I was a little more objective, I thought about several things. First, she had enough money, and always had, for cigarettes. She was a chain-smoker and had plenty of cigarettes that morning. Second, she commented later in our conversation that she should have been at work, but was running late, and she didn’t seem to care much. She continued to sit at the counter, smoke up a storm, eat doughnuts and drink coffee. And third, I thought, I know I’m supposed to show hospitality because I might be entertaining an angel unawares, but this girl ain’t no angel.

Determining True Need

Ways can be found, of course, to determine true needs and to discover if people are trustworthy. The writer of Hebrews is not teaching us that we should be indiscreet and respond to everybody who asks for a handout. Some people are irresponsible and downright manipulative. It would not be the loving thing to do to allow them to continue this kind of behavior. This is why we should be cautious.

However, the cumulative teaching of the Bible is that we should care about those in need, including people we don't know. We must not exclude those who have real needs. By sharing only a cup of cold water, we are sharing with Jesus Christ Himself (see Mark 9:41). As Christians, we are to be generous and hospitable. This is one of the outstanding marks of Christian maturity. I believe that is why Paul lists hospitality as one of the positive qualities in his letter to Titus (see 1:8). It reflects Christian maturity and helps us to develop good reputations.

Hospitality Begins at Home

The overall teaching from Scripture regarding the quality of hospitality as a sign of maturity definitely focuses on the way we use our homes. This was particularly true in the New Testament, because the churches had no permanent place to meet except in homes. If a man were going to be a spiritual leader, chances are the church would meet in his home. How could he be qualified without being generous in the area of hospitality in his life?

The quality of hospitality is a mark of maturity in any Christian man. True, our economic circumstances influence how much we are able to do. The size of our homes makes a difference in the number of people we can entertain. But on the other hand, in our own church, I have seen people who have small homes and apartments demonstrate hospitality just as often as people who have large homes. True Christian love transcends economic status. And when it does not, it should. That is why James wrote:

But the brother of humble circumstances is to glory in his high position; and the rich man is to glory in his humiliation, because like flowering grass he will pass away (1:9-10).

Points of Action

The following projects are designed to help you develop the quality of hospitality.

Love Is the Key

You'll never develop hospitality as you should without becoming a man of love.

As we have seen, love is foundational in developing this quality in our lives. Almost every passage in the New Testament that refers to being hospitable is encased in a context that emphasizes Christian love.

Remember: Biblical love is not a feeling. It is an attitude and involves action. Christian love is patience, kindness, generosity, humility, courtesy, unselfishness, good temper, guilelessness and sincerity (see 1 Cor. 13:4-7).<sup>2</sup>

hospitality no matter how you feel about it.*

Love Is Doing What Is Right

Begin to show hospitality no matter how you feel about it.

Some people wait for a desire to show hospitality. This may never come. You may need to start showing hospitality before you begin to sense any reward whatsoever at the feeling level.

Let's face it. Thinking about showing hospitality may threaten us. But we must remember that "perfect love casts out fear" (1 John 4:18). As we begin to practice biblical love, fear and threat will begin to subside.

Develop a Plan

Decide on some specific ways to show hospitality:

- Look for opportunities to share your home with spiritual leaders—pastors, missionaries and other Christian workers. Invite them for dinner or to stay in your home.
- Look for opportunities to share your home with other members of the Body of Christ who comprise your own local church.

Remember: A special physical need is not necessary for you to show hospitality. The need might be social, emotional or spiritual. Many Christians are lonely and in need of fellowship, and may be too bashful to reach out to others. They are waiting for an invitation to share their lives with someone else.

- Show hospitality to non-Christians by beginning with the people around you: your neighbor across the street or the person who works beside you at your job.

Remember: You are the Christian. You are the one who should be reaching out. Invite these people to dinner or ask them to join you in an evening of relaxation and social activity.

A word of caution: Don't get overly ambitious. Begin by building friendships with one or two non-Christians. Frequently this will set the stage for an invitation to a Bible class in your home or for you to personally witness for Jesus Christ.

- Open your home for an informal Bible study, either for Christians or non-Christians.

Remember: To invite non-Christians to your home for a Bible study means building friendships first. You must learn to love people because they are people and not just because you want to win them to Christ.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What are some of the ways you practice hospitality?
- Why do we hesitate to practice hospitality as we should?
- What can we do to overcome the barriers that keep us from practicing hospitality?
- Can you think of something you'd like to do immediately to begin to develop this spiritual quality in your life? Would you mind sharing it with us?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 8

Communicating Sensitively

Able to teach

A Definite Setup!

I have a close friend and fellow board member at Fellowship Bible Church North who was involved in the banking industry for years before he retired. At one point he served as CEO of one of the largest savings and loan organizations in the state of Texas.

One Saturday morning, he and his wife, Sharon, had an unusual experience. They were sitting at home having a quiet breakfast. Hearing some commotion, they looked out their front window and saw a group of people get off a bus and then begin to picket their house.

In a few minutes, a man holding a document knocked on the front door. Standing beside him was another man with a camera. Mike had never seen these people before but very quickly got the picture. This man wanted him to sign the document confessing that his savings and loan organization was “redlining” minorities.

The fact is that the government had passed legislation that could give this impression. Since First Texas Savings and Loan was prominent in the state of Texas, and since Mike was CEO, they targeted him in order to let the government know they were not happy.

Mike knew immediately that this was a setup. These people never expected to get his signature but, rather, an argument or a slammed door. Reading between the lines, this would look great on the front page of the Dallas Morning News the next day, and hence the man with the camera.

An Unexpected Invitation

Nonplussed, these men got neither an argument nor a slammed door. Rather, Mike invited them and all the picketers to come into his family room for a cup of coffee and an open discussion. As these people huddled on the front lawn, they at first couldn't believe what was happening. However, they knew this invitation was sincere. Consequently, they laid down their placards and one by one entered Mike's family room.

While Sharon served them coffee, Mike began to share his own journey as a long-term resident in Dallas. He told them of his concerns for minorities as well as some of his own efforts in helping overcome inappropriate attitudes and actions.

A Ministry Moment

At the right moment, the Holy Spirit enabled Mike to share an important event in his own life that forever changed his perspective on others. He told his visitors of his conversion to Christ in a Bible study in the home of one of his neighbors. At that point, mouths began to drop open, and Mike even began to get some positive affirmations. Apparently, some in the group at least understood the gospel.

To make a long story short, these picketers eventually left, each one thanking Mike and Sharon for their hospitality. Not another word was ever mentioned about their grievances. They got on the bus and drove away, and Mike never heard from them again.

A Marvelous Example

I heard Mike share this story at one of our elder/pastor retreats. As he did, I immediately thought of the quality of being “able to teach,” which Paul listed in his second letter to Timothy. Once Mike sat down, I stood up and shared this passage to demonstrate how Mike had fleshed out in his life that Saturday morning what Paul had written to Timothy regarding how to handle adverse people:

But refuse foolish and ignorant speculations, knowing that they produce quarrels. The Lord’s bond-servant must not be quarrelsome, but be kind to all, able to teach, patient when wronged, with gentleness correcting those who are in opposition, if perhaps God may grant them repentance leading to the knowledge of the truth (2 Tim. 2:23-25).

I have often asked myself, What would I have done if I had been in Mike’s shoes? Frankly, I would have probably triggered an argument, falling into the trap that had been set. After all, they invaded my space. This was my home. They were on private property. And to make matters worse, they were accusing me falsely.

But that’s not the way Mike reacted. He attempted to “get inside” these people and to understand their grievances. He didn’t go on the defensive. He was “kind to all” by inviting them into his home. He was “patient when wronged” even though he was being accused falsely. He corrected with “gentleness.” In short, Mike was “able to teach,” and because he was able, the group of adverse people changed their attitudes. Most importantly, many clearly heard Mike’s testimony regarding his relationship with Jesus Christ and how it changed his life. Hopefully, some of them not only came to a “knowledge of the truth” regarding Mike’s concern for minorities, but to an understanding of what Jesus meant when He said “I am . . . the truth” (John 14:6).

Didaktikos

The little phrase “able to teach,” which Paul used to describe maturity, is a powerful concept. It comes from one Greek word, didaktikos, and though there are hundreds of references in the New Testament that refer to some form of teaching, this particular word is used only twice (see 1 Tim. 3:2; 2 Tim. 2:24).

Our tendency is to see the phrase “able to teach” through our own mental grid. We think of good teachers we have known through the years, people who are effective communicators and who skillfully motivate people to learn. We might think of high-powered lecturers who can hold us spellbound. In actuality, we are thinking about their abilities, skills and expertise.

A Powerful Cluster of Words

The fact is that didaktikos has a far broader meaning than just pedagogical skill. You can see this clearly when you look at 2 Timothy 2. Note that the English phrase “able to teach” is surrounded by words that describe not skills but qualities of life. In his communication, Timothy was to avoid arguments. He was to be kind to all people—Christians and non-Christians. He was to be patient even when falsely accused and personally attacked. He was to correct those who opposed him in a gentle manner. Note: Sandwiched right in the middle of these qualities of life is the phrase “able to teach.”

*A man who is able to teach is a person who is not in

In his writings to Timothy, Paul gave us a very clear and functional definition of this quality of maturity. To be able to teach means that we must learn how to communicate with others in a nonthreatening, nondefensive manner. We avoid arguments by being sensitive to people who are confused or even obstinate. When verbally abused, we don't respond in the same way. In short, a man who is able to teach is a person who is not in bondage to himself. Rather, his true identity in Jesus Christ has enabled him to be in control of his mind and emotions.

A Personal Confession

I remember one experience as a young Bible institute teacher in which I didn't demonstrate this quality well. A student who was several years older than I persistently disagreed with me in one of the classes I was teaching. He actually became obnoxious. One day I became so infuriated with his behavior that I gathered up my lecture notes, dismissed the class and walked out the door, leaving the students to fend for themselves.

Later, I found out why this man tried so hard to intimidate me. He came to my office one day, explained why he had tried to embarrass me and then asked for forgiveness. You see, I had begun dating a girl on campus, who is now my wife. He confessed that he had his eye on Elaine, but I had “beat him to the draw.” I, of course, was completely unaware of his intentions and feelings. Once he unraveled his story, it all made sense. I certainly forgave him, and I asked forgiveness for not reflecting more maturity myself. If I had been more experienced, I could have handled the situation much differently. In hindsight, I should have asked the student to see me personally after class to discuss his concerns. I would have probably found out the real reason for his attitudes and actions. Furthermore, I would have demonstrated more Christlikeness to the students—that I was really able to teach in the full sense of what the phrase means.

I've never forgotten that experience. It taught me a great lesson. In similar circumstances, I've been able to handle these situations in a much more godly fashion and have been able to teach in some very difficult circumstances.

Our Attitude Toward Scripture

Consider another significant dimension to the meaning of being able to teach. Although Paul does not use the word didaktikos in his letter to Titus, he makes several statements that clearly refer to the same concept. He writes that a mature man is “self-controlled, holding fast the faithful word which is in accordance with the teaching, so that he will be able both to exhort in sound doctrine and to refute those who contradict” (Titus 1:8-9).

Here Paul demonstrates that being able to teach doesn't mean we compromise the Word of God. A mature man of God is to hold fast to the faithful word. But at the same time, he does not allow himself to get involved in “foolish and ignorant speculations” (2 Tim. 2:23). Again, we see a significant correlation between Paul's comments to Timothy and his comments to Titus.

Our Understanding of Scripture

A man who is able to teach not only is self-controlled and convinced that the Word of God is true, but also understands the Scriptures sufficiently to be “able both to exhort in sound doctrine and to refute those who contradict” (Titus 1:9). We cannot communicate God's truth without knowledge of the Word of God. This is why Paul also wrote to Timothy:

The things which you have heard from me in the presence of many witnesses, entrust these to faithful men who will be able to teach others also (2 Tim. 2:2).

As maturing Christian men, we must constantly be learning more and more of God's Word, and understanding it. Only then can we teach it. This is why Paul also wrote the following words to Timothy:

Be diligent to present yourself approved to God as a workman who does not need to be ashamed, accurately handling the word of truth (v. 15).

To Sum Up

A man who is able to teach must demonstrate three significant qualities: First, he must be characterized by spiritual and emotional maturity—being able to handle himself in threatening situations. Second, he must have a firm conviction that the Word of God is true. Third, he must understand the Word of God's teachings sufficiently to be able to teach all men.

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you develop the quality of being able to teach.

Be Able to Teach

All of us should strive to develop the quality of being able to teach.

It's certainly essential to being a good father. Paul underscored this when he wrote to the Ephesians:

Fathers, do not provoke your children to anger, but bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord (6:4).

This quality is also essential for being a participating member of your local church. Paul also underscored this point in his letter to the Colossians:

Let the word of Christ richly dwell within you, with all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with thankfulness in your hearts to God (3:16).

Grow Spiritually

All of us should be involved in a program of Bible study, preferably in a group.

This provides accountability, which we all need. Furthermore, learning Scripture together in community is a biblical principle, and every member of the group can contribute to the learning process. Clearly the Holy Spirit uses this dynamic within the Body of Christ (see Eph. 4:16). In our own church, we have developed a series of study books called Discovery. These courses are designed to be interactive in studying biblical truth. Through this process, we've seen dramatic changes take place in people's lives. Both Christians and non-Christians are able to interact together in a nonthreatening environment. We've seen people not only put their faith in Christ, but also grow in Christ dramatically. For more information on the availability of these study books, contact the Center for Church Based Training at www.ccbt.org.

Develop Psychologically

All of us should develop our psychological maturity, so that we will not be threatened when discussing the Word of God with those who may disagree with us.

The fact is that mere knowledge of Scripture will not automatically solve this kind of personality problem. Many people who know the Bible from cover to cover are defensive and highly threatened people, and frequently use the Scriptures as a personal sword rather than as the sword of the Spirit.

The following are some practical suggestions for developing this quality of life:

- If someone attacks you personally, never retaliate out of threat or embarrassment. Respond warmly and with openness. Draw them out even more.
Remember: “A gentle answer turns away wrath, but a harsh word stirs up anger” (Prov. 15:1).

If you are too emotional at the moment to respond objectively, it’s better to refrain from commenting until you have developed a degree of objectivity and emotional control. To help you achieve this goal, memorize and practice the words of James:

This you know, my beloved brethren. But everyone must be quick to hear, slow to speak and slow to anger; for the anger of man does not achieve the righteousness of God (1:19-20).

- Try not to embarrass people publicly, even though they may attack you publicly.

Seek to speak to them in a private setting. This is also true when disciplining children.

*Teaching involves more than working with a group; it is also a one-on-one

---

- If you continue to have problems with insecurity and feelings of threat, seek out a mature Christian friend or counselor. Attempt to understand the reasons for your defensiveness. Be open and honest about your feelings and why you believe this happens.
- Gently force yourself to function in threatening situations.

This is difficult but necessary. You will develop confidence as you begin to act and succeed in threatening areas.

Warning: Don't run away when you fail. Learn from the failure, and the next time you will succeed.

Remember: The more you succeed, the more confidence you'll develop.

Learn Effective Methods

Learning how to teach creatively takes more than Bible knowledge and psychological maturity. Become a student of those who model effective communication and learn by experience.

This will be more beneficial than a how-to course in all aspects of teaching. You'll learn Bible content as you prepare to teach others, and you'll also develop a sense of security the more you teach. When you teach, ask someone to sit in and give you constructive feedback.

Remember: Teaching involves more than working with a group; it is also a one-on-one process. You may find one-on-one teaching the most productive, particularly when it comes to working with your children. Paul used this family model in discipling new Christians. This is clear from his first letter to the Thessalonians:

Just as you know how we were exhorting and encouraging and imploring each one of you as a father would his own children, so that you would walk in a manner worthy of the God who calls you into His own kingdom and glory (2:11-12).

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions and statements are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What communication experiences have you had that were threatening? How did you handle them?
- Who are some of your favorite teachers who model the true meaning of being able to teach? Why?
- Describe some communication experiences you wish you could do over again.
- Describe a communication experience—either positive or negative—in which you learned your greatest lesson.

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 9

Being Moderate in All Things

Not addicted to wine

An Irate Mother

Several years ago, I received a letter from an irate mother. Her teenage son was drinking. Knowing her concerns, someone recommended that she give her son a copy of my book The Measure of a Man (the original edition). She thought it was a good idea but decided to read the book herself before giving it to her son—which is certainly commendable. However, when she got to this chapter on moderation, she became extremely angry, tore up the book and threw it in the trash can. She then wrote me, told me what she had done, accused me of false teaching and condemned me for perverting the Word of God and leading people astray.

Unfortunately—and by her own confession—she drew these conclusions after reading only the first paragraph, which was as follows:

If Paul were living today in our Western culture, would he condone drinking alcoholic beverages? Not necessarily, as will be shown later. But the issue before us in 1 Timothy and Titus is not total abstinence from any form of alcoholic beverage. The basic word paroinos used in these verses literally means a man “who sits too long at his wine.” In other words, he overdrinks, and consequently, is brought into bondage and loses control of his senses.

Winning Battles and Losing Wars

Frankly, this woman’s letter saddened me. I could see that she might have been trying to win a battle, but she might very well lose the war. The fact is that the Bible does not teach total abstinence. As Merrill Unger reminds us, in most of the passages of the Old Testament where the common word for wine is used, the reference “certainly means fermented grape juice.”<sup>1</sup> The same is true in the New Testament. There is no way to prove that references to wine were to only nonalcoholic grape juice. Rather, all historical, cultural and exegetical evidence points in the opposite direction.

To be true to Scripture, we must also interpret Paul’s references to wine in his letters to Timothy and Titus in the same way. Paul was stating that a mature man of God is not to be “addicted to wine.” Paul was emphatic in his letters (see 1 Tim. 3:3; Titus 1:7). He did not say a mature man should never partake of wine. Rather, he was not to be addicted to it.

What the Bible Teaches

Drunkenness Is Definitely Condemned

Both the Old and New Testaments clearly teach against drunkenness. In Proverbs we read:

Do not be with heavy drinkers of wine, or with gluttonous eaters of meat; for the heavy drinker and the glutton will come to poverty, and drowsiness will clothe one with rags (23:20-21).

Later in the same chapter of Proverbs, we discover a series of questions: “Who has woe? Who has sorrow? Who has contentions? Who has complaining? Who has wounds without cause? Who has redness of eyes?” (v. 29). We then find the answer: “Those who linger long over wine, those who go to taste mixed wine” (v. 30).

A serious warning follows this explicit explanation regarding the price people pay when they overindulge:

Do not look on the wine when it is red, when it sparkles in the cup, when it goes down smoothly; at the last it bites like a serpent and stings like a viper. Your eyes will see strange things and your mind will utter perverse things (vv. 31-33).

The New Testament writers are just as clear in their teaching. Paul wrote to the Ephesians:

And do not get drunk with wine, for that is dissipation, but be filled with the Spirit (5:18).

Addictive Behavior Is Sinful

Addictive behavior was Paul’s primary concern in his letters to Timothy and Titus when he outlined a profile for Christian maturity. He wrote to the Corinthians: “All things are lawful for me, but not all things are profitable. All things are lawful for me, but I will not be mastered by anything” (1 Cor. 6:12).

Here Paul was not condoning sinful behavior. Rather, he was saying that we can become enslaved even to those things that are not wrong in themselves, such as food and the fruit of the vine. In terms of wine, some people drink and get drunk; but some also become addicted. They consistently overindulge. Today, we classify these people as alcoholics.

*We can become enslaved even to those things that are not wrong in

---

Addiction is the number one problem in today's culture. This is why some people believe in total abstinence, and rightfully so for alcoholics or even for those who have this propensity. But it's not accurate to say that the Bible teaches that all Christians should abstain from drinking wine.

We Are to Avoid Being a Stumbling Block

The Bible also teaches that we should never cause anyone to stumble and fall into sin. Read Paul's words to the Romans:

It is good not to eat meat or to drink wine, or to do anything by which your brother stumbles (14:21).

Children of alcoholics run a four times greater risk of becoming alcoholics than children of nonalcoholics.<sup>2</sup> True, we can engage in the age-old argument regarding what causes these kinds of problems—heredity or the environment—but both are involved. Even though genetic factors play a major role in the development of alcoholism, it is still true that modeling plays a great part in causing children to start drinking. When children have a propensity to become addicted, they are simply moved in that direction by bad parental examples. Children will often do what we do, not necessarily what we say they should not do.

Yet the issue is far greater than having children who exhibit a natural inclination toward alcoholism, either psychologically or physically or both. Although we, as their parents, may be moderate drinkers, our children live in an alcoholic society. They experience incredible peer pressures. Social acceptance is a tremendous force, and even children who have good parental models can be led astray.

We Are Not to Judge One Another

Within a period of two weeks, two men in the church I pastored approached me regarding drinking wine. They were well aware of the problems in our society and knew the dangers of alcoholism. But the factor that triggered their question that day related to their children. Was it worth the risk to drink, although moderate drinking was not a sin for them? Would their freedom in Christ eventually cause one of their children to abuse this freedom?

As we discussed the matter, they both came to the conclusion that drinking alcohol in front of their children was not worth the risk. One decided on total abstinence. The other decided on abstinence in front of the children. Both made decisions based on principles of Scripture (see Rom. 14).

Avoid Other Overindulgences

Overeating

Eating and drinking are often mentioned together in the Bible. Let's face it! There are Christians who overeat regularly but would never touch a drop of alcohol. And some of these Christians are the most vociferous in judging others who drink socially. Yet, they are consistently overweight, not because of glandular problems but because of a lack of self-discipline.

Jesus Christ had some strong words to say about this kind of judgmental behavior:

Why do you look at the speck that is in your brother's eye, but do not notice the log that is in your own eye? Or how can you say to your brother, "Let me take the speck out of your eye," and behold, the log is in your own eye? You hypocrite, first take the log out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to take the speck out of your brother's eye (Matt. 7:3-5).

Smoking

There is another inconsistency among Christians. Some never drink because they believe the Bible teaches total abstinence. Yet they smoke tobacco on a regular basis.

We cannot deny the harmful effects that smoking has on our bodies. The statistics are piling up:

- Cigarette smoking is a major factor in lung cancer, stroke, coronary heart disease, and causes malignancies in other parts of the body.<sup>3</sup>
- Smoking during pregnancy accounts for an estimated 20 to 30 percent of low-birthweight babies, up to 14 percent of preterm deliveries, and 10 percent of all infant deaths. One in 10 preterm infants suffers from respiratory distress syndrome.<sup>4</sup>
- An estimated 4.5 million adolescents smoke, with 2,000 becoming established smokers each day.<sup>5</sup> One third of these will die from a disease caused by smoking.<sup>6</sup>
- Over 440,000 Americans die from diseases directly related to cigarette smoking each year. Smoking is responsible for one in five U.S. deaths.<sup>7</sup>
- Secondhand smoke is estimated to cause 35,000 heart disease deaths each year.<sup>8</sup>

These observations speak for themselves. As Christians, we should do nothing that will interfere with our health. Again, we must remember that the Holy Spirit dwells within us, and He wants to use our bodies to glorify Jesus Christ and to carry out His purposes on this earth.

Maintaining Our Christian Witness

One day I had a conversation with a woman who was trying to witness to the people in her office by letting them know that as a Christian she didn't drink alcohol. She appeared surprised when I shared with her that she need not make this an issue. People knew her preference simply by her actions. Neither did she have to drink to win a listening ear. In our culture, people generally respect others who refuse alcoholic beverages. A simple "no, thank you" is all we have to say. We can graciously refuse a drink and then concentrate on building relationships with non-Christian coworkers, looking for opportunities to share the gospel, which is based—not on our commitment to total abstinence—but on our relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Actions Speak Louder Than Words

While staying in a motel in Denver, Colorado, I had some free time and decided to work on my Sunday message. As I often do, I went to a restaurant nearby to get a cup of coffee and to continue my research. Because it was dinnertime, they hesitated to seat me in the main dining room and suggested that I go to the bar.

Imagine the scene! There I was, seated in a little bar reading my Bible and drinking a cup of coffee. Ironically, I was studying what the Scriptures had to say about the subject of not being "addicted to wine."

Seated behind me were two couples who very obviously glanced my way. I overheard a bit of their conversation, and it was apparent they were intrigued that I was studying my Bible in a bar. Finally, one of them mustered up enough courage to ask me what I was doing. To their amazement, they found out I was a pastor preparing a message for the weekend. But they also commented jokingly that I was only drinking coffee.

I was rather amazed and amused that they thought my Bible and the bar didn't mix. I could sense that the very presence of the Word of God made them feel somewhat uncomfortable. However, the fact that I was at ease opened the door to be a Christian witness. Though I normally wouldn't choose a bar as a place to study my Bible, in this instance I considered it a divine appointment.

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you develop a Christian lifestyle that conforms to biblical principles.

Don't Judge Others

You may consider yourself a mature Christian, having developed certain boundaries for your own life. However, have you made absolute for other Christians what God has created to be a freedom? For example, God has allowed you the freedom to abstain from drinking any alcoholic beverage. But God has also given other Christians freedom to partake, although as has been shown, He has set definite boundaries. On the other hand, God has given you freedom to drink moderately. Are you judging those who have decided on abstinence? As Paul wrote, "Each person must be fully convinced in his own mind" (Rom. 14:5).

The Bible clearly teaches that Christians should never partake of anything that harms their bodies, clouds their thinking or brings them into bondage.

Practice the Higher Principle

Although Paul did not teach abstinence, and although he instructed Timothy to “use a little wine” (1 Tim. 5:23) for health reasons, he also told the Romans, “It is good not to eat meat or to drink wine, or to do anything by which your brother stumbles” (Rom. 14:21). The issue Paul was concerned about in Romans 14 was not the meat or the wine per se. Rather, it was the idolatrous associations and the problems partaking may have created for weak Christians. As Paul wrote to the Corinthians, “Some people are still so accustomed to idols that when they eat such food they think of it as having been sacrificed to an idol, and since their conscience is weak, it is defiled” (1 Cor. 8:7, NIV). Paul was saying that at times abstinence is the better way to live. Love and concern for others is the higher principle, and mature, sensitive Christians are willing to avoid certain activities, although they may be legitimate in themselves. Does anything in your life violate this broader and higher principle?

Be Disciplined

The Bible clearly teaches that Christians should never partake of anything that harms their bodies, clouds their thinking or brings them into bondage. If you believe you lack discipline in any area in your life, the following specific suggestions will help you:

- Isolate the problem.
- Discuss the problem with several other mature Christians to see if they concur that it is really a serious issue or just an oversensitive conscience.
- If others concur that the problem is real, ask them to pray regularly for you.
- Write out the problem on a piece of paper, and then write out a specific goal you wish to accomplish in overcoming the problem. Read your goal several times a day if necessary.
- Develop a regular time to study the Scriptures and to meditate and pray about the problem.

Remember: Many Christians fail consistently because they are programmed for failure. If you want to overcome a problem, program yourself for victory in Jesus Christ.

If you cannot overcome your difficulty by following these five suggestions, seek help from a competent, Christian counselor. It may be that you need to understand and come to grips with some deeper roots that are causing this problem. For example, overdrinking and overeating are frequently a reflection of emotional issues such as fear, anxiety, insecurity and anger. If this is true, you may need professional help to assist you in understanding these issues, and you may also need a support group to encourage you and to hold you accountable.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What is your thinking regarding the guidelines in this chapter? In other words, do you agree or disagree?
- What personal experiences can you share that verify the importance of following these biblical guidelines?
- How can a Christian avoid judging others in the area of drinking alcoholic beverages? How can this be done in other areas, including Christian liberty?
- How can Christians avoid using their Christian liberty in ways that cause others to stumble and fall into sin?

Set a Goal

CHAPTER 10

Overcoming Self-Centeredness

Not self-willed

Rubbing Others the Wrong Way

During my college years, I had a very self-centered roommate. Everyone who had a close relationship with this young man came to this same conclusion. In fact, almost everyone who knew I shared a room with him felt sorry for me.

Because I am by nature tolerant of others' weaknesses, I did my best to make this relationship work. Yet the more I gave in to my roommate's whims and wishes, and the more I tolerated his irritating behavior, the more he seemed to take advantage of me.

As we sat together talking one evening, his actions pushed me over the edge. All the resentment and frustration I had allowed to build within me for many months came pouring out. I told him not only how I felt but also how everyone else felt.

*A Christian man who is self-centered, self-pleasing and self-oriented does not have a

Fortunately, God used this confrontation to get his attention. As I shared my frustration and deep feelings of hurt and anxiety, I literally wept. Although I certainly could have improved my method of communication that day, God used it nevertheless. Somehow my roommate saw beyond my frustration and anger to my personal concern for his welfare and his reputation as a Christian. Furthermore, he knew in his heart that I had patiently put up with a lot of self-oriented behavior on his part.

Although, at the time, he didn't verbally acknowledge that what I shared was true, he immediately made some changes. He began to be more sensitive and others-oriented. I could tell that he was attempting to make some midcourse corrections in his life.

Shortly after that confrontation, he moved on to another ministry. My greatest reward, however, came several years later. In a letter, he acknowledged that most everything I had said that day was accurate. He wanted me to know that while I was pointing out these things to him, he knew then that it was true. However, at that moment, he couldn't bring himself to admit it. He now wanted me to know he had changed.

What Others Think

I share this story not to put my friend down or to make myself look good, for I had my own share of immaturity. My purpose is to illustrate that a Christian man who is self-centered, self-pleasing and self-oriented does not have a good reputation. He is overbearing and frequently rubs others the wrong way.

The Greek word authadees can be translated “self-willed” in Titus 1:7, and is used in only one other place in the New Testament—in Peter's second epistle, where the apostle warned Christians against false teachers and how to recognize them. They “will follow their sensuality . . . and in their greed they will exploit you with false words” (2:2-3). They “despise authority” and are “daring” and “self-willed” (v. 10). Their hearts are “trained in greed” (v. 14), and they speak with “arrogant words of vanity” (v. 18).

Though Peter was describing an extreme manifestation of this negative characteristic, any self-willed man is a self-centered man. He is his own authority. He is often greedy and vain. Joseph H. Thayer defines this characteristic as self-pleasing and arrogant.<sup>1</sup> In essence, a self-willed man builds the world around himself. He wants to “do as he pleases.”<sup>2</sup> Williams translates that a man who is not self-willed is “not stubborn.”<sup>3</sup>

That's Not Me

Because Peter used the word “self-willed” to describe a person whose arrogance and self-centeredness were blasphemous and horribly sinful, it's easy to rationalize. The fact is that we may be appalled at what Peter described but still be self-oriented. We have simply sugarcoated our sinful behavior with regular church and Bible study attendance and with religious language. We may have strong biblical beliefs and yet be guilty of failure in this area of our lives. Although our basic doctrines—what we believe about God, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit and how to be saved—may be correct, we may still be arrogant and self-willed. We are still reflecting “the deeds of the flesh” (Gal. 5:19), or as the NIV reads, “The acts of the sinful nature” rather than “the fruit of the Spirit” (vv. 19,22).

The Self-Willed Continuum

Self-centeredness comes in various degrees. Even mature Christians have a tendency toward self-centeredness and can fall into this trap. We'll find it's easy to be self-pleasing and overbearing until Jesus Christ takes us home to heaven. But at some point this kind of behavior breeds resentment, lack of respect and lack of trust. If we persistently demonstrate this trait, people will not feel comfortable around us or respect us.

Why We Avoid Confronting the Self-Willed Person

It's difficult to confront a self-willed Christian because "teachability" is not that person's strong suit. Most of us resist telling such a person our true feelings because we're intimidated and often fear rejection. Rather, we work hard to please and to be accepted by an overbearing person. Unfortunately, people naturally talk about this person rather than to this person.

Marital Relationships

Nothing is more devastating to a marriage than a self-oriented spouse. Selfishness probably destroys more marriages than any other negative characteristic, and as men we're particularly vulnerable.

Although both husbands and wives can be guilty of being self-centered (it lies just below the surface for most of us), as men we can stumble and fall more easily. First, our egos are easily threatened, which is one of our greatest weaknesses. This can quickly lead to selfish reactions. And if we're honest with others and ourselves, we'll admit this is often a smoke screen to cover up our feelings of insecurity and a weak self-image.

Second, as men we tend to operate at a rational level more than at a feeling level. Consequently, we often don't understand how our overbearing approach to leadership affects our wives. When they try to tell us how they feel, rather than listening, we give them 10 reasons why they shouldn't feel that way.

Again, if we were really honest with ourselves, we would know we often respond to our wives with logic because we are threatened by their negative feelings. We are not only trying to prove to them that they shouldn't feel the way they feel, but we're also trying to prove to ourselves that we are not to blame for their feelings.

In some respects, I found it easier to reflect Christ's love when I was single than when I got married. Having to relate to my wife 24/7 is far more demanding than having to relate to my friends, my fellow Christians and the larger Christian community. To love my Christian neighbors as Christ loved me is one thing. But to love my wife as Christ loved the Church is yet another.

This is why Paul emphasized this point for husbands in his letter to the Ephesians and Colossians (see Eph. 5:25; Col. 3:19). He knew that marriage puts far greater demands on our commitment to Christ. Not only do we become more aware of our own selfish tendencies, but we are also faced with the challenge of living with our mate's weaknesses. The truth is that no husband is perfect and no wife is perfect. Unless we are truly committed to practicing God's principles of love, our imperfections are likely to create alienation rather than mutual Christian growth and edification as God intended.

Parent-Child Relationships

Our ability to be humble and kind is tested even further in our relationships with our children. A self-willed father can devastate and discourage his children. Though this is true for both parents, it is particularly applicable to fathers, which is why Paul wrote:

Fathers, do not provoke your children to anger, but bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord (Eph. 6:4).

In his letter to the Colossians, Paul stated this truth more specifically:

Fathers, do not exasperate your children, so that they will not lose heart (3:21).

A self-centered, self-willed father can easily create intense anger and resentment in his children. This should not surprise us, because this kind of behavior creates anger and resentment in all of us. I'm amazed at how often we expect children to tolerate our adult weaknesses and immature behavior to a greater degree than we tolerate the same kind of behavior in ourselves or in other adults.

What Causes Self-Centered Behavior?

Some of us have simply learned to be self-centered and self-willed. We're spoiled and conceited. We were overindulged as children. We always had our own way, and we still want our own way as adults.

Unfortunately, becoming a Christian doesn't automatically turn us into unselfish and others-oriented men. In fact, we can often live a life of pious behavior in certain realms but be selfish and self-centered in other circumstances. Tragically, I have seen men rationalize this kind of behavior by using biblical statements ripped out of context. For example, some pastors become authoritarian and lord it over others (see 1 Pet. 5:2-3). They use their God-ordained position inappropriately.

I have also seen husbands rationalize self-centered behavior because God says they are to function as "the head" of their wives. Again, they use their positions of authority to become authoritarian, domineering and controlling. Somehow they do not see that this is a total contradiction to loving their wives just as Christ loved them (see Eph. 5:25).

For several years, I conducted an open-line talk show in Dallas. People called the radio station to talk about any concerns they had. I'll never forget receiving a call from a young man whose wife had just left him.

"What happened?" I asked. "Well," he said, "she believes that I'm too controlling—that I'm too much in charge." "Are you?" I asked. "I'm just trying to do what God says I should do," he responded. "Didn't God say that I was to rule over her?"

How tragic! I went on to explain that what he was doing was the result of sin. God is not telling us to dominate and control our wives as a result of Eve's failure and Adam's failure as well.

Childhood Repression

Some people become extremely self-willed for another basic reason. It's much more difficult to understand and sometimes hard to detect by the person himself. When you're talking about the problem, a person may blurt out, "I really don't know why I am so negative" or "I really don't understand my selfishness."

A Child's Self-Willed Phase

Self-willed behavior often relates to early childhood. Between ages two and three, a child goes through a natural self-will phase. It's normal in every child's life—a time when he transitions from extreme dependency to independence. It's biological as well as psychological. The child begins to learn to control the world around him, including people.

A Child's Greatest Gift

Many parents misunderstand this phase. They fear that their children are becoming overly strong willed and may grow up trying to control others the rest of their lives. Rather than seeing this natural bent as one of God's greatest gifts that needs to be channeled and directed, they resist it and try to break the child's will, which can cause intense anger. If the child expresses that anger overtly, it only leads to more conflict with the parent. Consequently, to stay out of trouble, children repress these strong, aggressive feelings. Often these emotions are buried deep within the child.

Tragically, this approach to child rearing often produces the opposite result. Rather than overcoming the self-willed syndrome, which automatically happens at about age three or four when the will is naturally channeled, the child grows into a strongly self-willed person. This kind of person honestly has difficulty understanding why he is so self-centered and hard to get along with. But it's relatively easy to understand when you understand the psychological roots. Unfortunately, it's not as easy to overcome the problem.

On the other hand, an overly restricted child can become weak willed. Children simply give up, become overly cooperative and are fearful to assert themselves for the rest of their lives. These individuals need a lot of encouragement to become what God intended them to be—people who properly assert themselves without being fearful of rejection.

A Child's Natural Bent

A child's natural bent is beautifully illustrated in one of the proverbs:

Train up a child in the way he should go, even when he is old he will not depart from it (22:6).

Often we interpret this verse from Proverbs as a parent's responsibility to educate a child in the way that the parent thinks the child should go. More specifically, as Christians, we interpret this as training the child to go the way God wants the child to go. But this is not the full meaning of this proverb. Rather, we are to "train up a child" according to the way God has created each child. We are to consider the natural bent. We are to cooperate with the natural phases that are part of childhood development. When we do, we'll not be working against God but with God in helping the child to develop and accept God's truth in the natural context of life. This is indeed a profound truth, and it correlates beautifully with what we have learned about childhood development from the social sciences.

To Sum Up

A strong self-will, generally speaking, can come from two primary sources. First, we may have been overindulged, pampered and spoiled. We were given too much freedom and too many bad examples. As a Christian, or as a non-Christian, this kind of experience produced selfishness and self-centered behavior.

Second, rather than having too much freedom, we were overly restricted and repressed, particularly as young children. Our natural self-will phase was never culminated, which naturally resulted in more cooperative traits. To this day, we are still trying to get through this phase by attempting to control our world. We have deep-rooted feelings of resentment and bitterness, which still control us. These feelings are also regularly getting us into trouble with those around us.

Whatever the source—whether spiritual or psychological—a mature Christian is not to be self-willed. We must face ourselves realistically and, by God's grace, overcome this negative trait.

Points of Action

This personal project is designed to help you overcome self-centered and self-willed behavior.

Differentiate Between Self-Will and a Strong Will

A strong will is not necessarily the same as self-will. Willpower is one of the greatest possessions we have. A spiritually and psychologically mature Christian, however, does not use his willpower to dominate and crush others. He is able to maintain a balance between being strong willed and humble. The apostle Paul was certainly this kind of man.

Determine the Root Cause

A man who is self-willed because of overindulgence and the development of bad habits can usually isolate the problem quickly. On the other hand, a man who is self-willed because of being overly restricted or repressed in childhood frequently has difficulty understanding why he does what he does. The reason is that this kind of behavior often stems from subconscious motivations.

Take Action

If you are self-willed because you have always been allowed to get your own way, be thankful. It's relatively easy to stop acting that way. Allow Jesus Christ to control you. Study the Word of God. Find out what the Bible says about being a gracious, loving and unselfish Christian and then start loving people. Stop using others for your own ends. Allow the Holy Spirit through the Word of God to produce His fruit in your life. Remember the words of Paul:

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law. Now those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires. If we live by the Spirit, let us also walk by the Spirit. Let us not become boastful, challenging one another, envying one another (Gal. 5:22-26).

On the other hand, if your problem has psychological roots that are difficult to understand, you'll probably need some professional help from a competent Christian counselor. You need someone who can help you understand why the problem exists, and then help you set up goals to overcome the problem.

But a word of warning! It's easy for self-willed people to rationalize once they understand the reasons for their behaviors and then to continue to live irresponsible lives. They choose to go on in their sin, while at the same time blaming someone else for creating their problems.

Remember: God holds all of us responsible for our actions, no matter what the root cause of our problems. The Lord understands and sympathizes, but we must begin to act responsibly by using the resources He has given us.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Without being specific, can you describe men you work with who are self-willed, as described in this chapter? How do these men affect you and others they associate with closely?
- Have you ever had a problem with being self-willed? How has it affected your relationship with your wife? Your children? Other fellow Christians?
- If you have ever struggled with this problem, can you describe the main cause? Would you be willing to share it with us?
- How are you overcoming this problem? What progress have you made?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 11

Handling Anger Appropriately

Not quick-tempered

“Be Angry, and Yet Do Not Sin” (Eph. 4:26)

I grew up in an environment where I came to believe that angry feelings are sinful. My late father, although a wonderful, loving and caring man, tended to be passive. I seldom saw him lose his temper, although he faced situations that would cause the average man to explode. I came to admire that quality. I later discovered, however, that Dad often repressed his negative feelings. Like so many people, he was angry underneath, and in retrospect, I now recognize his passive-aggressive behavior.

As a young boy who loved his father, I naturally personalized his approach in handling my own angry feelings. I learned to repress my feelings, just like my dad did. I really didn't allow myself to feel anger. Consequently, I too had passive-aggressive tendencies.

*To deny anger in others and ourselves can lead to some serious psychological, spiritual and even

As I began to gain insights regarding this dynamic in my life, I had to relearn how to handle anger. Though it took time, I began to stop denying that I felt these emotions, although I discovered that repression had become an almost automatic response. I also began to understand my own passive-aggressive reactions and how to express anger in a more biblical fashion.

Anger Is Normal

It's impossible to live without getting angry. It's a natural, God-created emotion. This is why Paul wrote, "Be angry, and yet do not sin" (Eph. 4:26). To deny this emotion in others and ourselves can lead to some serious psychological, spiritual and even physical problems.

Jesus Christ, the perfect Son of God, demonstrated that it's possible to express anger without sinning when He drove the money changers from the Temple. Seeing them exploiting others in the house of God, He overturned their tables and scattered their money all over the courtyard. He also made a whip out of cords and drove the sheep and cattle out of the temple area (see John 2:13-17). He, of course, was the Son of God; however, at the same time, He was human, expressing a very human emotion.

When Does Anger Become Sinful?

When It Results in Quick-Tempered Behavior

We all know people who consistently "fly off the handle." They're quick-tempered, allowing angry feelings to get out of control. The word Paul used in Titus 1:7 literally means passionate. A quick-tempered person loses his cool and usually says and does things that hurt and offend others. Needless to say, this is anger that has become sinful.

When It Hurts People Physically

This kind of behavior correlates with another negative characteristic also listed by Paul in his maturity profile (see chapter 12). A Christian who is violent is certainly out of the will of God. The concept here means to be a "striker"—to hurt people through physical force. This is why parents should be very careful when disciplining children. If we're not careful, we'll allow anger—and we will get angry—to cause us to sin against God and our children.

When It Persists and Results in Bitterness

In the same reference, Paul spoke directly to this kind of anger. He wrote, "Do not let the sun go down on your anger, and do not give the devil an opportunity" (Eph. 4:26-27).

When we allow anger to linger, it can eventually turn into bitterness. But, at the same time, we all need a cooling-off period. It's virtually impossible to suddenly flip a switch and dissipate angry feelings. Time becomes our friend. It gives us an opportunity to understand what has caused our anger and to become more objective.

Personally, I have found it helpful to avoid writing letters or making telephone calls when I'm feeling intense anger. If I do write a letter when I'm feeling this way—which can be good therapy—I always try to hold the letter for at least 24 hours. Normally, I then make a lot of changes because I have become a lot more objective.

In most instances, I also have someone else who is close to the situation and knows the circumstances read the letter and give me feedback. On occasions, I have been advised not to send the letter at all. At that point, it's better to pick up the telephone and talk to the person directly, especially after having developed more objectivity.

When We Prolong Communications

One day I sensed a strain in my relationship with my wife. Frankly, I couldn't understand what was happening. At first, I thought it was just one of those moments in the stream of life that we all experience and that eventually passes. But it didn't.

Finally, I awakened one morning, still feeling angry, and broached the subject, trying to be teachable. I was amazed at what I heard. She was interpreting certain things in my attitudes and actions that had precipitated her responses. I had in turn responded in a certain way because of some things she had said, which I had totally misunderstood.

What had happened is what happens in many marriages. We had a breakdown in communication that led to our mutual mis-interpretations. Fifteen minutes of honestly and openly sharing thoughts and feelings in a nonjudgmental and nondefensive way changed our perceptions on the whole problem and resolved it. I was amazed at how two people can live together for so many years and so totally misunderstand each other's thoughts and feelings.

To allow misunderstandings to persist can lead to bitterness and increasingly aggressive actions. We allow the sun to go down while we are still angry. We give the devil a foothold in our lives. Needless to say, sinful anger then raises its ugly head.

To allow misunderstandings to persist can lead to bitterness and increasingly aggressive actions.

Obviously, Paul was not speaking literally of a 24-hour day. It's certainly a good idea to settle issues before the day ends, providing that it is possible. But some problems erupt as the sun goes down, and it takes time to process those feelings. I know one couple who have a rule never to go to bed angry. In many instances, this is possible and a great idea. But what about the times you feel intense anger after you're already in bed?

The point Paul was making is that we need some time to think, reflect and cool off, but we should not allow anger to persist. If we do, it will inevitably become sinful. We will do things and say things that are out of the will of God.

When We Hurt People Emotionally and Spiritually

On one occasion, I was enjoying a hamburger at McDonald's. A young mother sitting at another table suddenly began to verbally and mercilessly attack her young son. He must have been about five or six years old. I don't know what he did to irritate her (maybe he spilled something), but I'll never forget his response to her angry outburst. I could see him withdraw physically and emotionally, reflecting horrible humiliation on his face. He never said a word, nor did he cry. He simply withered like a green plant sprayed with powerful poison.

This mother's verbal abuse didn't stop inside the restaurant. Minutes later they crossed the parking lot, and before getting into the car, she cut loose again. This time she came at him with a pointed finger and strong language. She must have verbally abused him for a full two minutes as the little guy turned his head away trying to escape this psychological beating.

You might guess what she screamed when he looked away. "Turn and look at me!" I clearly remember his efforts as he tried to raise his eyes and look into her ugly countenance.

By this time, I was becoming angry. I can still feel the same emotions as I recount the story. I wanted to grab this woman, shake her and shout a few choice words myself. Obviously, I didn't know all the factors involved, but I was sure of one thing: She was an angry, frustrated woman, and the little fellow was a scapegoat. No matter what he did (and it couldn't have been much), the mother's behavior reflected a quick-tempered and verbally violent woman.

Don't misunderstand. I am not saying children do not need discipline, but we should avoid publicly embarrassing our children. And we should never displace our own anger on them, no matter what they have done.

Verbal abuse can be more devastating than physical abuse. It inevitably creates anger in the child. The only thing the child can do is to repress the angry feelings, which will eventually manifest themselves in other ways, either passively or actively. Passive anger leads to depression, self-condemnation and withdrawal. Active anger often causes a child to displace his or her angry feelings on other children—people the child can verbally or physically attack without fear of losing the battle—which often brings more punishment on him or her. It's not surprising that in many instances these children eventually get into serious trouble with the law and even end up in prison.

When We Become Vengeful

It's natural to want to hurt those who hurt us—to get even. But that, God says, is not our right or our responsibility. Paul wrote, "Never pay back evil for evil to anyone. Never take your own revenge, beloved, but leave room for the wrath of God, for it is written, 'Vengeance is mine, I will repay,' says the Lord" (Rom. 12:17,19). It's God's will for all of us to "not be overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good" (v. 21).

What Causes Sinful Anger?

We allow angry feelings to lead to sinful actions for several reasons:

- We are made in God’s image, which was terribly tarnished when sin entered the world.

God is both a God of love and a God of anger. Because we are made in His image, we have a unique capacity to experience both of these emotions.

- We may have been exposed to bad models.

Angry people nurture anger in others. This is why Solomon wrote:

Do not associate with a man given to anger; or go with a hot-tempered man, or you will learn his ways and find a snare for yourself (Prov. 22:24-25).

This is an especially serious problem when the bad model is a child’s parent. Children cannot suddenly remove themselves from a negative home environment.

Don’t misunderstand. Our children need good models, not perfect models. They need to be able to watch adults demonstrate how to handle anger in mature and appropriate ways.

Remember, too, that children can understand anger. If we totally hide our own anger from them, they may grow up thinking it is wrong to have angry feelings. This can lead to intense guilt feelings on their part when they feel anger.

I remember one incident when my son was about eight or nine years old. He was stirring his iced tea and kept clinking the spoon against the side of the glass. Frankly, it irritated me. I had a pretty rough day and just the sound of the consistent clinking on glass got on my nerves. I asked him to stop—and he did, for a few seconds. Then he began to clink again.

Once again I asked him to stop, this time with a little more intensity in my voice, and again he cooperated, for a few seconds.

The third time it happened, I turned to him, asked him to look me straight in the eyes and said with more intensity than ever, “Kenton, I’ve asked you to stop two times already. Now please obey me. That noise makes me angry!”

My son looked at me somewhat startled. Then with a calm spirit, he said, “Oh, okay, Dad! I understand.” This time he really understood and stopped. He needed to hear me share my anger in a direct but nonabusive way. That he understood.

- We can easily develop bad habits.

Angry outbursts can become a habit. We learn that we can sometimes manipulate others with this approach to problems. We have simply developed a bad habit—a way of responding.

Or we may have concluded from past experiences that becoming angry is the normal way to behave. It has become so much a part of our behavior that it is as natural as breathing. Unfortunately, we are responding in an inappropriate way simply because that’s the way we have learned to respond.

- We may have been mistreated.

Abuse is the most difficult problem to correct and overcome. Unfortunately, children are most often the victims, although more and more the battered spouse syndrome is emerging. Most women who are victims are battered physically. Most men who are victims are battered psychologically.

Perhaps the most applicable point is to make sure we are not guilty of abuse ourselves. Certainly, if we know it is happening to others, we should do all we can to help, realizing that it is not an easy problem to resolve.

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you overcome sinful anger.

Develop a Proper Biblical Perspective on Anger

Ask yourself the following questions and answer yes or no. Be as honest as possible.

- Do I tend to get angry quickly and frequently?
- Do I find that angry feelings persist and linger?
- Do I want to take matters into my own hands and get even with others who make me angry?

If you answer yes to any of these questions, you are no doubt facing an anger problem in your life. It is also a sin problem. Begin by confessing this sin to God and claiming forgiveness through the blood of Christ (see 1 John 1:9).

Remember: You must be honest with God. If you have an anger problem, don't try to fake it with the Lord. Tell Him exactly how you feel, confess that your anger is sin and ask Him to help you overcome this problem.

Proceed to Isolate the Cause or Causes of Your Anger Problem

The following questions will help you isolate the causes. Are you angry because

- of a bad parental example?
- you were spoiled and have developed into a self-centered person?
- of insecurity?
- of an overly restrictive childhood?
- you have simply developed bad habits?
- you have been abused and mistreated?

Remember: Most anger problems have multiple causes. To understand these causes and to overcome the problem, you will probably need to talk with someone you can trust, someone who will listen objectively and help you isolate and understand the causes.

Take Action to Overcome Your Problem

The following suggestions will help you take action:

- Regardless of the cause, don't blame your problem on someone else. Don't feel you have to seek revenge. Allow God to make things right.
- Learning to control anger calls for understanding and insight. Meditate on the following Proverbs:

He who is slow to anger has great understanding (14:29).

He who restrains his words has knowledge, and he who has a cool spirit is a man of understanding (17:27).

A man's discretion makes him slow to anger (19:11).

The more we understand the circumstances that cause anger in others and ourselves, the more we will be able to control that anger and handle it in others and ourselves. We need an accurate perspective.

- Learn to overcome your anger problem through an intelligent and rational approach.

Some counselors believe that people can overcome anger simply by expressing that anger in nonhurtful ways. To a certain extent, this is helpful, and may be necessary. More recent research reveals, however, that if this kind of behavior is encouraged on a persistent basis, it will simply reinforce bad habits. In other words, having an adult consistently react in childish ways cannot ultimately solve a childhood problem. At some point, we must approach the problem rationally and responsibly.

James gives us some very practical advice that encapsulates this action step: "Be quick to hear, slow to speak and slow to anger" (1:19). Personally, I try to avoid responding verbally to a person or situation when my feelings are unusually intense. If I do respond, I will usually say things I regret.

There is a fine line here, for at times we should respond immediately. It may be the right time to deal with the problem. But in doing so, we should be able to respond maturely and in a nonvindictive and nondefensive way.

Remember: It's not wrong to share our feelings of anger. But when we do, we should not attack the other person. For example, I might say, "I'm feeling very angry right now. I feel threatened, hurt and misunderstood, though I'm sure I don't understand all the factors involved," which is always true, even though we may feel we have an accurate perspective. There are always circumstances we don't understand.

This approach is quite different from the person who shouts, "I'm angry. Why do you always pick on me? What's the beef? What's your problem? Why are you so insensitive? Can't you see what you're doing to me and everyone else?"

- Set specific goals for your life in the specific areas where you are troubled.

Write out your goals, read them regularly and ask God to help you achieve them. If you have learned to get angry through a bad example, learn to manifest Christlike characteristics. For example, make patience a goal for the situations that really bother you.

If you are a spoiled, self-centered person, get your eyes off yourself and onto others. See what you can do for others, rather than always thinking of what others can do for you.

If you are insecure and easily threatened, program yourself to avoid a negative and defensive response when someone challenges your ideas. Rather, learn to listen and ask more questions.

Preventative Maintenance

All human beings, including Christians, become angry. Furthermore, all of us need a program to keep our emotions under control. The following are some suggestions:

- Stay in tune spiritually. Avoid getting out of fellowship with God. Keep your prayer life in order and listen to the voice of God as He speaks through the Scriptures.
- Avoid having to face difficult and tense situations when you are physically and emotionally tired.
- Engage in a regular program of physical exercise, especially if you work under pressure and constant tension.
- If you become angry or upset about a particular set of circumstances and you are unable to shake the problem, learn to express your feelings in an objective and straightforward manner. Don't brood. Communicate, but avoid sending "you" messages that threaten the other person.
- Learn to back off every aggravating situation and try to look at it objectively. Why did it happen? What problems may the other person involved be facing? Ask yourself what you can do to help become a part of the solution rather than the problem.
- Memorize James 1:19-20. If anger is a problem in your life, meditate on these verses every morning before you begin your day's activities, and then ask God to help you put this truth into practice.

This you know, my beloved brethren. But everyone must be quick to hear, slow to speak and slow to anger; for the anger of man does not achieve the righteousness of God.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What have you discovered is the best way to handle your anger?

- What do you do when you feel you have no place to go to share your angry feelings?
- What experiences can you share in which you have seen anger out of control? What happened?
- Do you know someone who has an anger problem and needs help? Can you share this need for prayer without violating a confidence?

CHAPTER 12

Avoiding Destructive Behavior

Not pugnacious

Face-to-Face with Murder

One day I received a telephone call that seemed surreal. As a pastor, I've faced a variety of tragedies—but none as shocking as this one. One of my former parishioners had been killed, bludgeoned to death with a hammer or some similar deadly object. While she was playing the piano over the noon hour, someone entered her home, snuck up behind her and performed this dastardly deed.

*When sin entered the world, humanity inherited an incredible capacity

---

She and her husband had been small-group leaders in our church for a number of years before they moved to another city and became involved in another fellowship. In fact, her husband served as an elder in this new church.

I immediately called the husband to share my grief. During that conversation, he invited me to conduct his wife's funeral, which I did. Needless to say, it was a somber occasion.

Then came an even greater surprise. The husband was later accused of murdering his wife. Though he admitted in court that he had been involved in an affair during the time his wife had been killed, he denied his involvement in her death. Nevertheless, the evidence was overwhelming, and he was sentenced to life in prison.

My emotions are still somewhat raw as I pen these words. It's a shocking story and it should be, even though family violence is happening more and more in our society. But what makes this story even more shocking is that this man claimed to be a Christian and was deeply involved in church ministry, even at the highest leadership level—serving as an elder.

Make no mistake about it. When sin entered the world, humanity inherited an incredible capacity toward violence. This is why the apostle Paul addressed this issue when discussing Christian maturity.

Anger out of Control

The translators of the New American Standard Bible chose the word “pugnacious” to describe the Greek word pleektees. It's an appropriate word, but it may be vague to the average English-speaking person. Thayer defines this kind of man as a “bruiser”; one who is “ready with a blow”; “a pugnacious, contentious, quarrelsome person.”<sup>1</sup>

The King James Version leaves no question about what it means to be pugnacious. A mature man of God is not to be a striker, one who physically hurts others. Pugnaciousness, then, is really anger out of control—not just verbally but physically.

Paul used the word pleektees in both his letter to Timothy and the one he wrote to Titus (see 1 Tim. 3:3; Titus 1:7). In both instances, the word follows the phrase “not addicted to wine.” The connection is clear. A person who loses control of his senses because of alcohol also tends to lose control of his anger. How many brawls have started in bars when people have had too much to drink?

Cain and Abel

Violence in its worst form began with our first parents' eldest son, Cain. He resented his younger brother because God accepted Abel's offering and rejected Cain's, probably because of Cain's sin and wrongdoing in the first place. God told Cain, “If you do well, will not your countenance be lifted up?” (Gen. 4:7).

The Lord then added a significant warning we should all heed:

And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire is for you, but you must master it (v. 7).

Sadly, Cain didn't heed God's warning. He didn't come to grips with his jealousy and anger. He “let the sun go down” on his wrath. Whether he planned his brother's death or struck out at him in a moment of rage, we're not told. We simply read that while they were out in the field alone, “Cain rose up against Abel his brother and killed him” (v. 8).

Moses' Serious Sin

Some of God's choicest servants have allowed their anger to get out of control, leading to violent acts. Moses killed an Egyptian who was beating a Hebrew. Although Moses no doubt felt justified in what he had done—probably because of his high political position in Egypt as well as his heritage as an Israelite—it's clear that he took both the law of the land and God's Law into his own hands. Consequently, he brought down on his own head the wrath of the king of Egypt, and at the same time lost the trust of the very people he attempted to defend. As a result, he had to flee into the wilderness to escape death (see Exod. 2:11-15).

David's Horrible Crime

David's violent crime probably represents the most frightening illustration in Scripture. It demonstrates that even a man after God's heart—a man who wrote the beautiful twenty-third Psalm—can commit violence against an innocent human being. In a moment of selfish desire, although he had access to hundreds of other women who in his culture were recognized as his legitimate wives, he used his kingly position and power to take another man's wife into his own bedchamber. When Bathsheba became pregnant, he tried to cover his sin with an insidious plot. He designed a scheme to have Uriah, Bathsheba's husband, killed on the front lines in battle so that it appeared to be an accidental death.

David paid some horrible consequences for these sins, consequences that plagued him until the day he died. His son Amnon raped his own sister, Tamar (see 2 Sam. 13:1-14)—another violent crime that has been around since the Fall. In turn, David's son, Absalom, became angry with Amnon, and after two years of bitterness, schemed Amnon's death (see vv. 22-29).

Although David was intensely repentant for his sin (and God certainly forgave him), he never escaped the consequences. His family's story is one of the most sordid and sad sagas in all of Scripture. It's filled with horrible violence.

Too Close for Comfort

As I reflect on the subject of this chapter, I can't help but think about Nazi Germany and the violent acts committed against millions of Jews and many, many others. You see, I am German—mostly. Though I was born in America, I grew up in a German community. Many of my closest friends are German. Some were born in Germany and moved to the United States following World War II.

Ethnically, I represent some of the same people who so casually herded millions of Jews into gas chambers. When I was just a young man, other young men my age threw babies against brick walls and battered their brains out, and then went home to their own children, held them in their arms, rocked them and then tucked them into bed.

Are all Germans psychopathic? Mentally sick? Insensitive and cruel? The answer, of course, is a decided no. But we, like all people, are sinners. And all of us, along with every human being alive, have the same capacity to engage in violence toward our fellow human beings and to follow the leadership of violent men—Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin and Saddam Hussein. Maybe these men were psychologically ill as well as spiritually degenerate, but why did hordes of men and women who were mentally and emotionally sound follow them and carry out their orders?

Whether you can accept it or not, the Bible teaches that all human beings have the same potential. We have a sin nature that can lead us to do horrible things and overshadow whatever semblance of good remains in our hearts and personalities. The prophet Jeremiah said it well: “The heart is more deceitful than all else and is desperately sick; who can understand it?” (17:9).

Eichmann Is in All of Us

Relative to what happened in Nazi Germany, Chuck Colson recounted what he had seen on network television’s 60 Minutes:

Introducing a recent story about Nazi Adolf Eichmann, a principal architect of the Holocaust, Wallace posed a central question at the program’s outset: “How is it possible . . . for a man to act as Eichmann acted? . . . Was he a monster? A madman? Or was he perhaps something even more terrifying: Was he normal?”

Normal? The executioner of millions of Jews normal? Most self-respecting viewers would be outraged at the very thought.

The most startling answer to Wallace’s shocking question came in an interview with Yehiel Dinur, a concentration camp survivor who testified against Eichmann at Nuremburg trials. A film clip from Eichmann’s 1961 trial showed Dinur walking into the courtroom, stopping short and seeing Eichmann for the first time since the Nazis had sent him to Auschwitz 18 years earlier. Dinur began to sob uncontrollably, and then fainted, collapsing in a heap on the floor as the presiding judicial officer pounded his order in the crowded courtroom.

Was Dinur overcome by hatred? Fear? Horrid memories? No, it was none of these. Rather, as Dinur explained to Wallace, all at once he realized Eichmann was not the god-like officer who had sent so many to their deaths. This Eichmann was an ordinary man. “I was afraid about myself,” said Dinur, “. . . I saw that I am capable to do this. I am . . . exactly like he.”

Wallace’s subsequent summation of Dinur’s terrible discovery—“Eichmann is in all of us”—is a horrifying statement; but it indeed captures the central truth about man’s nature. For as a result of the Fall, sin is in each of us—not just the susceptibility to sin, but sin itself.<sup>2</sup>

When It Hits Home

The reality of what Chuck Colson pointed out in his editorial hit me one day in a personal way. My oldest daughter had a scary experience when she was driving to work. While pulling up to a stoplight, she inadvertently and unintentionally irritated a driver in another car.

The driver jumped out of his car and ran up to hers and tried to pull open her door. Fortunately, it was locked. He next proceeded to beat his fists against her windows, trying to smash them in. He also pounded the hood and kicked the side of the car, and finally with his bare hands demolished her sideview mirror.

As my daughter looked on in horror, she noticed particularly the man’s eyes. They were ablaze with fire and hatred, reflecting violent anger. My heart almost skips a beat when I think what might have happened to my daughter had this man been able to get inside her car.

Root Causes in Our Culture

Bob Vernon, who served in the Los Angeles Police Department for 37 years and is a strong Christian, points out in his book L. A. Justice that the problems in our society have many root causes. But in terms of violence, Vernon made the following penetrating analysis:

Valuing material things and money above people is one of the true root causes of our culture's destruction. When the material is appraised more than people, people lose self-esteem and regard for others.

Many people today lack a healthy sense of self-worth. The intensity of the problem varies from person to person, but at the extreme end of the continuum are those who hate themselves. They see no value in themselves. Their lives are miserable. And if they're just a bunch of garbage waiting to decay, so is everyone else.

Those who have reached this extreme are very dangerous. They're angry and bitter. Life for them is a grievous, sour joke, something to dull with drugs and sex until it mercifully ends. Since that's their view, it's easy to end the "worthless" life of another. When self-respect is nonexistent, so is respect for others.

In the inner city, the overemphasis on possessions is obvious. Many young lives have been snuffed out for a leather jacket, a ghetto blaster, or a pair of Air Jordans.<sup>3</sup>

Some Startling Statistics

But, you say, Bob Vernon is talking about the ghetto. Consider the following statistics:

- In Texas, one out of four women experiences domestic violence in her lifetime. Fifteen percent of Texas women are severely and repeatedly abused.
- Nationally, an incident of wife abuse occurs once every 18 seconds.<sup>4</sup>

The Department of Human Resources in Dallas reported the following:

- They receive 250 to 300 calls monthly concerning child abuse.
- Of the above figures, 35 percent represent physical abuse, and 25 to 30 percent reflect sexual abuse.
- Eighty to 85 percent of abused children are under the age of three.<sup>5</sup>

Our Most Violent Crime

Similar statistics could be reported in nearly every major city and in most states in America. But one of the most violent tragedies that occurs every day is that an average of 180 babies are legally killed every hour in the United States. Legalized abortion is probably one of the greatest crimes against humanity that exists in our society today—a procedure approved and promoted by some of our most prominent and intelligent politicians. In essence, how far have we come from the crimes of Nazi Germany? How far are we from what really happened in the Roman Empire? I believe that in the mind of God, there is very little difference.

Points of Action

The project designed for overcoming a quick temper in the previous chapter is also applicable to overcoming violent behavior. Here are some additional suggestions for dealing with the problem:

Be Sure You Are Not Striking Out at People Verbally

Ask yourself the following questions:

- How frequently do I talk about other people's problems?
- With whom do I share this information?
- How often do I repeat information about a particular person?
- What kind of emotional reaction do I have when I talk about somebody else's problems?

If you talk frequently about others to a variety of people and enjoy repeating negative stories about a particular person, chances are you are getting even with someone. You are using a more culturally acceptable form of pugnacious behavior, but it is striking out just the same.

Make Sure You Follow a Biblical Approach to Handling Personal Offenses, Forgiveness and Sin

Study carefully the following Scriptures:

If your brother sins, go and show him his fault in private; if he listens to you, you have won your brother. But if he does not listen to you, take one or two more with you, so that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every fact may be confirmed. If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as a Gentile and a tax collector (Matt. 18:15-17).

Brethren, even if anyone is caught in any trespass, you who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; each one looking to yourself, so that you too will not be tempted. Bear one another's burdens, and thereby fulfill the law of Christ. For if anyone thinks he is something when he is nothing, he deceives himself (Gal. 6:1-3).

Once You Isolate Areas of Resentment in Your Own Personality, Proceed to Deal with Them

You might follow this sequence:

1. Confess your sin to God.
2. Pray for God's help in overcoming the problem.
3. Write out some specific goals to help you overcome your problem. For example, you might write, "I will not talk about Jim in a derogatory way," or "I will talk personally to Jim about the problem. If Jim hurts me, I will communicate with him face-to-face rather than get even through gossiping about him."
4. If you hurt someone's reputation, ask the person to forgive you.

Seek Professional Help if You Have a Problem with Physically Abusing Others

If you have a serious and persistent problem with anger and loss of emotional and physical control, and if you have not been able to overcome the problem through the previous suggestions, by all means seek professional help from a Christian psychiatrist or psychologist. You may need someone to help you analyze the problem and its root cause, and then support you in overcoming it.

Remember: You cannot expect someone else to solve your problem. Another person can only assist you. You must take the initiative and become a mature person in Jesus Christ, regardless of how difficult it is.

Warning: Abusive people are similar to alcoholics. They often live in a state of denial. Until they admit their problem, they cannot be helped.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Have you been physically abused? Would you be willing to share with us why it happened, how it affected you and what you are doing to overcome it?
- Have you experienced verbal abuse? Would you be willing to share with us why it happened, how it affected you and what you are doing to overcome it?
- Why do abused people frequently grow up and abuse others by repeating the same patterns? How can these patterns of behavior be broken?
- Why has sexual abuse become so rampant in our society?
- What can we do as Christian men to help solve this problem in our culture?

Treating Others Fairly

Gentle

A Winning Coach

In looking for a man to illustrate the quality of being gentle, I was drawn to Tom Landry, former coach of the Dallas Cowboys. I first met Mr. Landry in his office when a friend of mine and I introduced Tom to a young man named Tony Evans. Tony was an up-and-coming young black leader—our first full-time church-planting pastor from the first Fellowship Bible Church—who we believed could have a good influence on the team as a spiritual counselor. We wanted Tom to meet Tony.

Since then, and before his homegoing, I met Coach Landry here and there—in airports, on airplanes, at banquets and in other special meetings. I have also read most everything that has been written about his life and career.

An Epiikees Man

Tom Landry had a lot of special qualities that reflect Christian maturity. But one quality stands out that illustrates what Paul had in mind when he used the word epiikees in his letter to Timothy.

Coach Landry was fair-minded. Tony Dorsett, a premier running back who at times frustrated Landry, made the following comment as he reflected back on his years with the Cowboys: “Maybe you didn’t always like his decisions, but he was fair. He would listen to all sides of an issue and then decide what was best for the team.”<sup>1</sup>

Dorsett wasn’t the only Cowboy who at times caused a lot of difficulties for Landry. Dwayne Thomas, another powerful running back, helped lead the Cowboys to a Super Bowl victory. But Thomas later got hooked on drugs, and his behavior became so bizarre it became ridiculous.

Then Thomas (Hollywood) Henderson blew a potentially brilliant career for the same reason, and later became a public embarrassment to the whole Cowboys organization.

Faith Made a Difference

As tough-minded as Landry could be, he demonstrated incredible patience and forbearance with the men on his team. In his book, A Landry Legend, Bob St. John summarizes Tom’s approach: “His faith certainly was a factor in helping him to try to understand and cope with the much-troubled Dwayne Thomas and be more fair and understanding of a person such as Thomas (Hollywood) Henderson and the somewhat different behavior patterns of Tony Dorsett.”<sup>2</sup>

Randy White, an all-pro defensive lineman, put it this way: “Hey, I was there when he had a lot of those misfits, and Coach Landry would bend over backwards in giving them a second and even a third chance. That’s two or three more than they’d have gotten from anybody else—or from anybody in any other kind of business. He did it because he has faith in people.”<sup>3</sup>

Mike Ditka, who both played for the Cowboys and later coached in the NFL, added, “Tom Landry is probably the fairest guy I’ve ever been around. He let a lot of players push him to the limit. But when they did, that was it!”<sup>4</sup>

Life Before Christ

The facts are that Tom Landry was not always this kind of “gentle” man. His life as an NFL coach began to change dramatically when he became a Christian. On one occasion, an older fan (a man who appeared to be in his 60s) stopped Landry and made this comment: “Tom, I saw you play when you were with the Giants. You seem so calm now. But you used to get pretty mad in those days. Yes, you had a temper alright. You were awfully fiery.” Landry responded, “I guess we all grow a little, mature a little.”<sup>5</sup>

Landry’s Greatest Moment

As most people who follow professional football know, Landry’s brilliant career as an NFL coach came to a disappointing end when the Cowboys’s new owner, Jerry Jones, fired him. Because it was horribly mishandled, which Jones has admitted, all of Dallas and many fans and coaches around the league were appalled and angry. But in many respects, this was Landry’s greatest moment to be a witness for Jesus Christ, and he rose to the occasion. When other lesser men would have allowed the sun to go down on their anger, Landry faced the situation as a mature Christian should.

“I’m Not Bitter at All”

Though desperately hurt, Landry responded, “I’m not bitter at all. I knew what I was doing when I tried to bring this club back. This is the worst scenario, I guess, that could have happened. But I took that chance. . . . Things could have been handled better but you have somebody coming in who is awful new to this environment we live in. I’m sure he was very excited about the possibility of owning the Cowboys, and I doubt his thoughts went much further than that.”<sup>6</sup>

Gentle and Considerate

I have chosen this Tom Landry illustration because it isn’t often we find a Christian man who has been so well-known in a high-profile sports environment and who also demonstrated so dramatically what Paul had in mind with the word epiikees. Strange as it seems, it is a form of gentleness and patience that is unique. Translators of The Amplified New Testament capture this meaning with these words: “Not combative but gentle and considerate, not quarrelsome but forbearing and peaceable” (1 Tim. 3:3). Thayer defines the word as being “equitable” and “fair.”<sup>7</sup>

Paul’s Example

When the apostle Paul wrote to Timothy, outlining characteristics of Christian maturity, he modeled these qualities in his own life, including epiikees.

Confronting the Corinthians

When Paul wrote to the Corinthians, many of whom were falsely accusing him, he said, “Now I, Paul, myself urge you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ” (2 Cor. 10:1). Here the word “gentleness” is the same basic word Paul used in the list of qualities in his letter to Timothy.

If you read Paul’s additional comments, however, he didn’t mince words with the Corinthian Christians. He pointed out their sins, defended his apostleship and exhorted them to become mature Christians.

Paul was a gracious, sensitive and fair-minded man, but he would not compromise Christian truth and false accusations. He defended himself without being defensive. People could push him only so far. In this sense, Paul demonstrated the meekness and gentleness of Jesus Christ. Our Lord, who often turned the other cheek, did not hesitate to overturn the money changers’ tables and to make a whip of cords to drive the animals from the Temple court (see John 2:15-16).

Paul’s New Life in Christ

Although he was one of the most tough-minded men in all of Judaism, a man who approved of Stephen’s martyrdom, Paul’s life was dramatically changed when he became a Christian. As with all of us, it took him time to change behaviors that were not in harmony with Christian virtues. Yet he made those changes and became—not a perfect man—but a man who could write to the Corinthians without fear of contradiction and exhort them to be “imitators” of him, just as he was an imitator “of Christ” (1 Cor. 11:1).

Christians Should Understand Mercy

Paul was particularly concerned that we demonstrate this kind of gentleness toward non-Christians. He made this clear in his letter to Titus:

Remind them to be subject to rulers, to authorities, to be obedient, to be ready for every good deed, to malign no one, to be peaceable, gentle, showing every consideration for all men (3:1-2).

Overcome Evil with Good

Here again Paul used the word epiikees. Paul anticipated that some of the believers who lived in Crete might ask Titus why he insisted on treating unbelievers so graciously. Consequently, Paul explained his reasoning. First, he commented on these believers’ lives before they were converted to Jesus Christ: “For we also once were foolish ourselves, disobedient, deceived, enslaved to various lusts and pleasures, spending our life in malice and envy, hateful, hating one another” (v. 3).

Don’t Forget God’s Grace

Paul went on to remind them that although they as Christians were doing the same things, God had mercy on them:

But when the kindness of God our Savior and His love for mankind appeared, He saved us, not on the basis of deeds which we have done in righteousness, but according to His mercy (vv. 4-5).

Paul was instructing Titus—and teaching us—that as Christians we of all people should show mercy toward people who are lost in sin. Although we may not be able to identify with the depths of sin into which some people fall, we must remember that it is only by God’s grace that we may have been reared in a Christian home. It is only by God’s grace that we may not have been trapped in the mire of sin or grown up in a drug-infested ghetto.

A Stone Face or a Gentle Heart?

This is the kind of consideration Tom Landry extended to Dwayne Thomas and Hollywood Henderson, although they were flaunting a lifestyle that contradicted everything he believed and lived. Landry wanted to see them have a chance.

*We should show mercy toward people who are

Landry revealed his heart toward these men when he once said, “The most disappointing thing is I just couldn’t help them enough. I feel guilty that I couldn’t get them back on the right track. Once you get on coke or crack, you’re destined for trouble.”<sup>8</sup>

On another occasion, Landry added, “If I have a weakness, it may be that I’m too compassionate. I give people a chance to see whether they can turn it around. It didn’t work out for me too often.”<sup>9</sup> This is the gentle, epiikees side of Landry many people never knew. They only saw him as the “stone-faced” coach calling plays from the sidelines.

Blessed Are the Gentle (Meek)

Now that we have looked specifically at the way the Scriptures describe this special kind of gentleness, let's look more broadly at other forms of gentle behavior. The following scriptural texts speak for themselves.

Prautees (Gentle, Mild, Meek, Humble)

But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law (Gal. 5:22-23).

Brethren, even if anyone is caught in any trespass, you who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; each one looking to yourself, so that you too will not be tempted (6:1).

Walk in a manner worthy of the calling with which you have been called, with all humility and gentleness, with patience, showing tolerance for one another in love (Eph. 4:1-2).

So, as those who have been chosen of God, holy and beloved, put on a heart of compassion, kindness, humility, gentleness and patience; bearing with one another, and forgiving each other (Col. 3:12-13).

But flee from these things, you man of God, and pursue righteousness, godliness, faith, love, perseverance and gentleness (1 Tim. 6:11).

But sanctify Christ as Lord in your hearts, always being ready to make a defense to everyone who asks you to give an account for the hope that is in you, yet with gentleness and reverence (1 Pet. 3:15).

Eepios (Mild, Gentle)

But we proved to be gentle among you, as a nursing mother tenderly cares for her own children (1 Thess. 2:7).

The Lord's bond-servant must not be quarrelsome, but be kind to all, able to teach, patient when wronged, with gentleness correcting those who are in opposition, if perhaps God may grant them repentance leading to the knowledge of the truth (2 Tim. 2:24-25).

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you develop the quality of gentleness in all of your relationships.

Come to Know Christ Personally

Put your faith in Jesus Christ for salvation and be born again. Whatever form of gentleness we attempt to display, we must realize that God will help us when we put our faith in Christ for salvation, experience the new birth and then allow the Holy Spirit to take control of our lives.

In this chapter, I have used Tom Landry to illustrate the quality of gentleness mentioned by Paul in his maturity profile. Coach Landry would have been the first to acknowledge that the changes that came into his life happened because of his conversion experience.

Tom Landry confessed to an emptiness that came into his life in spite of his great football accomplishments. He puzzled about what was lacking. During this search, he turned his thoughts toward Jesus Christ. He had certainly read about Jesus throughout his life, but who was this man, really? Landry concluded that if he accepted Jesus Christ, then he must accept what Christ said. And if he accepted what Christ said, he needed to change the way he was living his life.

Join a Bible-study group. Landry's search began in a Bible study after the 1958 football season. A friend had invited him to join a group of men who often met at the Melrose Hotel for breakfast, followed by a Bible study. At first Landry was skeptical. But he kept attending, and ultimately his life was changed. He met Jesus Christ personally.

Regarding his conversion to Christ, Landry made these comments:

At some period during the spring of 1959, all my so-called intellectual questions no longer seemed important, and I had a joyous feeling inside. Internally, the decision had been made. Now, while the process had been slow and gradual, once made, the decision has been the most important one in my life. It was a commitment of my life to Jesus Christ and a willingness to do what He wanted me to do as best I could by seeking His will through prayer and by reading His Word.<sup>10</sup>

It's true that many of the qualities outlined by Paul might be seen—at least to a certain extent—in people who do not know Jesus Christ personally. But the fact is that we cannot consistently reflect Jesus Christ and His life as we should unless we come to know Him personally. Do you know Jesus Christ in this way?

Pursue Gentleness

Set this kind of gentleness as a goal for your life. The Christian life involves personal discipline. Once we come to know Jesus Christ personally, we not only have a new source of strength, but we also have the capacity to pursue Christian qualities. This is why the apostle Paul wrote to Timothy:

But flee from these things, you man of God, and pursue . . . gentleness (1 Tim. 6:11).

Seek Wisdom from Above

Discover God's wisdom through the Word of God and prayer, and listen to God. Remind yourself of the words of James:

But the wisdom from above is first pure, then . . . gentle (3:17).

Here James used the same word for gentle that Paul used in his maturity profile in his letter to Timothy. By learning God's Word, which is filled with wisdom from above, we can begin to develop and display this quality in our lives.

Converse with God. James also reminded us that we have access to this kind of wisdom through prayer. Thus he introduced his letter with these words:

But if any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, who gives to all generously and without reproach, and it will be given to him (1:5).

Evaluate Your Life

Isolate those relationships in your life where you have difficulty demonstrating this kind of gentleness. The following are some suggestions:

- If you are married, ask your wife and children to help make you aware of times when you are not fair-minded, equitable and considerate.
- Ask a close friend to evaluate your relationships with other people, and to give you feedback in any area where you do not demonstrate this quality of life.
- If you are a teacher, an employer or anyone who supervises other people, ask them to evaluate (in writing) how they view your relationships with others in terms of being fair and objective, and if you are able to listen to all sides of an issue before making a decision.
- Develop a regular Bible-study program with at least one other man. There is no substitute for the Scriptures in serving as a mirror to reflect those areas in our lives that are not reflective.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What are some relationships in your life in which you have difficulty being fair-minded and gentle in handling people?
- How have you developed an approach in working with people that has helped you improve in this area of your life?
- How can we maintain a better balance between being accepting, tolerant and fair, and making tough decisions gently?
- How have people taken advantage of your efforts at being tolerant, fair and considerate? Do you feel you were too compassionate? Or would you take the same approach again?
- Can you cite the times people took advantage of Jesus Christ when He demonstrated this kind of gentleness? What about the apostle Paul? What about your pastor?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 14

Being a Peacemaker

Peaceable [uncontentious]

Mr. Charge Ahead

I have a close friend who served with me as an elder at Fellowship Bible Church North. Those who knew him best called him “Mr. Charge Ahead!” In his younger days, he was known as “Fast Eddie.” He knew this trait at times got him into trouble, especially since he was a good debater, which at times was interpreted as being argumentative, insensitive and even contentious.

Before Eddie was selected to be an elder, we followed a standard procedure we regularly used in evaluating whether a man and his wife are qualified for this level of leadership. We ask all of our other elders (and their wives) and our staff pastors (and their wives) to fill out an evaluation form on each prospective candidate and his wife (if married). This form is based on the 20 characteristics outlined by Paul in his letters to Timothy and Titus that we are discussing in this book. We ask each person to use a seven-point scale (from 1 to 7) to express his or her degree of satisfaction or dissatisfaction with this person’s behavior on all 20 characteristics. For example, the first question reads, How do you evaluate this person’s reputation as a Christian? (see chapter 20).

When Eddie’s forms were returned, he was consistently marked down in several related areas, one being “contentious.” His wife, however, had almost perfect scores—a threatening situation for any husband.

As senior pastor, I and one other elder sat down with this man and his wife and shared these responses. Frankly, I was nervous. This kind of communication is always difficult, especially when it is someone with whom I feel close.

A wonderful thing happened. Eddie sat and listened quietly, obviously surprised. He was totally open and nondefensive. He thanked us for our time and candidness and assured us he would think and pray about what we had shared.

On the way home, Eddie asked his wife if she agreed with the evaluation. What she said surprised him. She did! In fact, she told him that she had tried for a long time to tell him the same thing.

The following is Eddie’s account of what happened:

When Maureen said that she agreed with the evaluation that I could be contentious, argumentative and too bold in defending the views I held strongly, I knew that God wanted to get my attention—big time. I also knew down deep that the evaluation was correct. As I asked God for help, He made it clear to me that I needed to develop the fruit of the Spirit known as gentleness. He also gave me a plan. I was to get my family to hold me accountable.

One evening I called my family together and asked each one to forgive me for not being gentle and to ask for their help. I explained to them that every time they saw me using my verbal skills to steamroll over them, raise my voice, show anger or be contentious in any way, they were to put an X on the family calendar in the kitchen. To my dismay, the next day I got five *X*s.

I considered changing the rules! But I was committed and my family helped me learn to be gentle. What started out as a crushing blow to my “Mr. Charge Ahead” ego has turned into a wonderful blessing in my life. I now know that viewpoints spoken in gentleness with energy are much more acceptable and effective with the listener. I certainly have not arrived at my goal, but I am on my way.

The changes this man made were immediately obvious to all of us, and he eventually became an elder. How Eddie handled our communication about these issues demonstrated his desire to reflect Jesus Christ in all of his relationships. Had he responded defensively, had he walked away angry, had he left the church—as some men do—he would have verified that he had a serious problem.

The Contentiousness Continuum

All of us at times fall somewhere on the contentiousness continuum, and for various reasons. In some instances, we are simply vulnerable. We may feel insecure. At other times, we are just plain obstinate. Or perhaps we’ve been hurt and are simply in a negative mood. We also may be getting even with someone for irritating or insulting us.

*It is not wrong to disagree or to challenge incorrect thinking or inappropriate

---

As with most of the characteristics we've looked at, Paul was concerned about the man who consistently and habitually demonstrates inappropriate attitudes and actions. He was also concerned about the unpredictable person, the man who at times is congenial and at times, seemingly without provocation, stirs up arguments and throws a wrench in the spiritual machinery that God designed to create peaceful relationships.

The Paul and Barnabas Argument

We must understand that it is not wrong to disagree or to challenge incorrect thinking or inappropriate behavior. Some of the godliest people don't see eye to eye on all issues.

Consider Paul and Barnabas! They were best friends and close missionary companions. They disagreed, however, regarding whether to take John Mark on a second mission trip. Mark had bailed out on the first journey. Paul lost confidence in him and wanted to leave him behind. But Barnabas wanted to give him another chance. Luke recorded, "There occurred such a sharp disagreement that they separated from one another, and Barnabas took Mark with him and sailed away to Cypress. But Paul chose Silas and left, being committed by the brethren to the grace of the Lord" (Acts 15:39-40).

This event has puzzled Bible students. Who was right and who was wrong? Paul was such a strategic leader in God's scheme of things that it's difficult to fault him in any way. We forget, however, that he was human, and also maybe he was being impatient and intolerant.

Personally, I believe Paul was driven by a strong commitment to the task God had given him and became insensitive to Mark. Barnabas, who was known for his strong people orientation, didn't want to see this young man devastated and perhaps lost to the ministry.

I also believe Paul learned a significant lesson because of this disagreement with Barnabas, which is later reflected in his relationship with Timothy and other coworkers (see Col. 4:10). Paul became a more sensitive and gentle man without losing his strong commitment to carrying out the Great Commission in the midst of tremendous opposition and difficulties.

Paul's Confrontation with Peter

On another occasion, Paul confronted Peter—yes, the great apostle Peter—and accused him of being a hypocrite. Paul minced no words in his letter to the Galatians:

But when Cephas came to Antioch, I opposed him to his face, because he stood condemned. For prior to the coming of certain men from James, he used to eat with the Gentiles; but when they came, he began to withdraw and hold himself aloof, fearing the party of the circumcision. The rest of the Jews joined him in hypocrisy, with the result that even Barnabas was carried away by their hypocrisy (2:11-13).

It's difficult to place blame in these situations, but it appears Paul was clearly right in what he did. Peter compromised, which became a stumbling block even to Barnabas.

One thing, however, is clear. Although God greatly used the apostles to carry out His work in the world, they were human and made mistakes. They, too, were in the process of becoming mature in Jesus Christ, along with those they were nurturing.

The “Sons of Thunder”

One thing about the divine author of Scripture—the Holy Spirit is open and honest. He exposes weaknesses as well as strengths, even in God’s greatest servants. James and John are classic examples. They were so contentious at times that Jesus called them the “Sons of Thunder” (Mark 3:17). There is no question that their motives were often selfish, even as the time grew near for Jesus to be crucified. On one occasion, James and John and their mother made a power move and asked Jesus if they could sit on His right and on His left in the Kingdom (see Matt. 20:20-28; Mark 10:35-45). When the other 10 men found out about it, they were indignant. James and John stirred up a hornet’s nest.

At this moment, Jesus taught all of them, and us, a powerful lesson:

Calling them to Himself, Jesus said to them, “You know that those who are recognized as rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them; and their great men exercise authority over them. But it is not this way among you, but whoever wishes to become great among you shall be your servant; and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be slave of all. For even the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many” (Mark 10:42-45).

We Are All on a Spiritual Journey

It’s encouraging to know that the 12 men Jesus chose to change the world had human weaknesses. All of them had serious character flaws, including the apostle Paul. But God changed all that, not overnight, but over a process of time. The apostle John, who was initially motivated by greed and selfishness, years later reflected that change when he defined love:

We know love by this, that He laid down His life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren (1 John 3:16).

Jesus’ Prayer for Unity

No concept is more important in the Scriptures than unity. This was one of Jesus’ greatest concerns. Knowing that the time was quickly coming for Him to complete the work He had come to do on Earth, He prayed in earnest to the Father for His disciples, and for us:

I do not ask on behalf of these [the apostles] alone, but for those also who believe in Me through their word [all of us who are Christians]; that they may all be one. I in them and You in Me, that they may be perfected in unity, so that the world may know that You sent Me, and loved them, even as You have loved Me (John 17:20-21,23).

Unity among Christians demonstrates to the world the deity of Jesus Christ and the unity He has with God the Father. It communicates the very essence of Christianity: “that God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself” (2 Cor. 5:19).

God is particularly pleased when we strive to create unity within the Body of Jesus Christ. This is why, according to Jesus:

Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called sons of God (Matt. 5:9).

Paul’s Concern for Unity

Although Paul at times failed the Lord—just as we all do at some point in our Christian lives—he had a major concern when he wrote to various churches. Consider the following exhortations that focus on being peacemakers rather than on being contentious:

Be of the same mind toward one another; do not be haughty in mind, but associate with the lowly. Do not be wise in your own estimation (Rom. 12:16).

If possible, so far as it depends on you, be at peace with all men (v. 18).

So then we pursue the things which make for peace and the building up of one another (14:19).

Now may the God who gives perseverance and encouragement grant you to be of the same mind with one another according to Christ Jesus, so that with one accord you may with one voice glorify the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ (15:5-6).

Therefore, I, the prisoner of the Lord, implore you to walk in a manner worthy of the calling with which you have been called, being diligent to preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace (Eph. 4:1,3).

Root Causes

We become contentious for various reasons.

Our Sin Nature

When we consider the fact that we “all have sinned” (Rom. 3:23), it shouldn’t surprise us that we tend to be selfish and self-centered, which always stirs up contention. Even as Christians we’re tempted to reflect the “deeds of the flesh” rather than the “fruit of the Spirit” (Gal. 5:19,23).

Bad Models

Some people grow up in this world seeing nothing but contentiousness in their family setting.

They don't know there is a different way to live. Consequently, they live life reflecting what they have learned from their parents.

Bad Habits

Bad habits are closely related to bad models. It is possible, however, for people to have good parental examples but to simply grow up in a competitive society where they learn to succeed by having the last word. This is their way of winning.

Insecurity

Insecurity can drive people in one of two directions. Some become reclusive and withdrawn. They seldom open their mouths and they retreat from any kind of competition.

Others can move in the opposite direction, often becoming domineering and authoritarian. They cover up their insecurities by trying to control everyone else. Even as Christians they resort to sinful tactics to defend themselves against their fear of failure.

Bitterness

A bitter man has "let the sun go down on [his] anger" (Eph. 4:26). He has given "the devil an opportunity" in his life (v. 27).

Most often, this bitter spirit begins with feelings of anger toward one or two people and then generalizes to include almost everyone. When this happens, it's reflected in a general contentiousness—a chip-on-the-shoulder attitude that affects many, many people.

Points of Action

The following personal project is designed to help you overcome contentiousness in your personality.

Evaluate

Attempt to isolate the root problem that causes you to be contentious.

Reflect on the answers to the following questions:

- Am I contentious because of selfishness and jealous attitudes that simply reflect my sinful nature?
- Am I contentious because of bad parental models?
- Am I contentious because of bad habits?
- Am I contentious because of insecurity?
- Am I contentious because of a root of bitterness?

Confess Your Sins

No matter what the cause of your contention, confess it as sin and seek God's forgiveness (see 1 John 1:9).

A place to start with any sin problem is to confess it to God. The wonderful truth is that He will forgive us. You must believe this to be true and accept it as a reality. There is no more wonderful feeling than to be at peace with God.

No matter what the cause of your contention, confess it as sin and seek God's forgiveness.

Ask Forgiveness

Confess your sin to those you have hurt and ask forgiveness.

It may be that you have hurt the entire local Body of believers where you fellowship. If so, confess your sin to the Body as a whole and ask for their forgiveness and prayers so that you might change your attitudes and behavior. Public confession, however, is not necessary unless it involves the total group. You may only need to ask forgiveness from a small group—your wife, your children and others who may know you well. If you are confused about confession, seek advice from your spiritual leaders. They can advise you regarding to whom you should confess and from whom you should seek forgiveness.

Put on God's Armor

Remember that you can only defeat Satan in this area of your life by relying on God's strength.

When Paul wrote to the Ephesians and exhorted them to get rid of all bitterness, rage and anger and to be kind and compassionate to one another, forgiving each other (see 4:31-32), he culminated this letter with these words:

Finally, be strong in the Lord and in the strength of His might. Put on the full armor of God, so that you will be able to stand firm against the schemes of the devil (6:10-11).

Also remember Paul's words to the Philippians:

I can do all things through Him [Christ] who strengthens me (4:13).

Set Goals

Write out specific goals that relate to your specific problems with specific people.

Read these goals every day. Use them as personal prayer requests. If you are a contentious element in your family, you may want to write out something like the following:

I will not start any quarrels when we are eating together.

I will listen to what others are saying without automatically disagreeing with them.

Be Accountable

Ask God to provide you with an accountability partner or an accountability group.

James underscored the importance of accountability when he wrote:

Therefore, confess your sins to one another, and pray for one another so that you may be healed. The effective prayer of a righteous man can accomplish much (5:16).

In conclusion, if you cannot solve your problem with these suggestions, seek professional help. You may find it difficult to isolate and discover the root cause of your problem. If so, seek out a Christian counselor to help you understand your personality conflicts.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Can you describe a relationship that is difficult because of contentiousness?
- Can you identify where you are on the contentiousness continuum? Would you be willing to share this with us?
- If you become contentious, what tends to trigger this reaction?
- How does contentiousness reflect itself in other negative characteristics listed by the apostle Paul in his letters to Timothy and Titus?
- Do you have a specific prayer request regarding contentiousness in your life or in another person to whom you are having difficulty relating?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 15

Learning Generosity

Free from the love of money

A Lesson I'll Never Forget

A number of years ago, I saw an ad in the paper announcing a seminar on how to become successful in the business world. Though it was certainly not sponsored by a Christian group, and even though I wasn't interested in leaving the ministry and becoming a businessman, I decided to attend—just to see what I could learn from someone who wasn't in my particular religious arena. Furthermore, I've always been interested in learning what I can about the business community since, as a pastor, these are the people who are my primary audience.

It turned out to be a rather typical “positive thinking” seminar. However, there was one point the speaker emphasized that really grabbed my attention and, frankly, changed my attitude. In essence, he said that an important key to success is to always be generous—to share the benefits of your accomplishments with others. In other words, don't become materialistic and selfish.

Here I was a pastor and a Bible teacher but what he said caused me to evaluate my own attitudes about sharing my material possessions. How generous was I?

This may seem like a strange question, particularly since my wife and I began tithing to our church (giving 10 percent of our gross income) from the time we were married. The fact is that my wife taught me to be a regular and systematic giver. She had learned this discipline from childhood. I had not. Initially I resisted the idea, particularly as I considered my minimal salary and the few possessions we had accumulated to begin our married life. (I had saved the total sum of $750 and promptly spent it on a car.) But tithe we did! We've never deviated from this as a minimum, and God has been faithful. We've not always had everything we wanted—but God has always met our needs.

What challenged me that evening as I listened to the speaker was definitely a heart issue. Though I gave consistently and regularly to my church, how generous was I in terms of helping other people who attempted to put bread on their tables?

Take Tipping, for Instance

Frankly, I had always resented this American tradition. I remember when the expected amount went from 10 to 15 percent. I resisted it—until my wife gently shamed me into doing what I should. She would look at the small amount that I had left on the table and then surreptitiously she would add another dollar or two. Frankly, I was embarrassed, particularly when she reminded me that she had been a waitress.

Being a generous tipper is also a wonderful opportunity to be a witness for Jesus Christ.

Hearing this non-Christian businessman speak, I suddenly realized that as a Christian I often gave—or should I say, met my obligations—rather grudgingly. Guess what? I changed my attitude. I discovered in a new way that true generosity involves not only what we give, but also how we give. The apostle Paul said it best when he wrote to the Corinthians, “God loves a cheerful giver” (2 Cor. 9:7). Somehow I had missed this point—until a secularist said it!

What changed? It’s simple, but significant. I began to see paying the furnace repairman as an opportunity to help him make a living. I began to consider it a privilege to get the oil changed in my car so that I could contribute to someone else’s economic welfare. And I now see tipping as an opportunity to encourage other people who are attempting to make a living.

An Opportunity to Witness

Being a generous tipper is also a wonderful opportunity to be a witness for Jesus Christ. You see, I often study my Bible and prepare messages in restaurants. I know it sounds crazy, but when I do, I make sure I give considerably beyond the 15 percent, just to let my server know that the Bible has influenced the man who is studying the Bible. And if I occupy a particular station for a couple of hours, I make sure I tip sufficiently to make up for the customers who would have occupied that space had I not been there.

In one of the restaurants I used to visit fairly regularly, I received a 10 percent senior discount. When I paid my bill, however, I added my 10 percent savings to the 15 percent tip, allowing me to give my discount back to the server. It’s amazing how word spread among the waitresses. In fact, I shared this story in one of my messages. After the service, a young woman approached me with tears in her eyes. “I’m a waitress in that restaurant,” she said. “I’m on a different shift from when you're there. However, even the waitresses on my shift who don't know who you are talk about your generosity." Needless to say, I was thrilled with the feedback. Hopefully these people will connect my Christian faith with my practice, and if they are not believers, they will come to know the Savior personally.

I'm aware of one church where the pastor had to exhort his congregation in a Sunday-morning message. You see, after the service was over, a large group of his people would descend on a particular restaurant in the area. However, the word was out among the servers in that restaurant: "Here comes those stingy church members." What a tragedy!

I now believe that in our culture if Christians can't afford to be generous tippers when they eat out, they really can't afford to eat out. Imagine what servers think when they see us bow our heads in prayer before we eat and then leave without being generous. What is worse is a selfish Christian who leaves a gospel tract on the table that explains the free gift of salvation. Need I say more. Being a Christian and being generous should be inseparable concepts. How can we who have been given the greatest gift ever given be anything but generous? Unfortunately, being generous is not true of many who claim to have received what Paul calls an "indefinable gift!" (2 Cor. 9:15).

Being a Christian and being generous should be inseparable concepts.

An Amazing Discovery

On one occasion, I met with our elders to do a study on what the Bible teaches about how we as Christians should use our material possessions. None of us realized what we were tackling. Indeed, we studied everything we could find in Scripture related to money and generosity. The study took us six months, meeting once a week for three or four hours every Thursday evening. To our surprise, we discovered that God says more about our material possessions and how we're supposed to use them than any other subject other than Himself.<sup>1</sup>

Shocking Statistics

We made another very shocking discovery in our research! Statistics demonstrate that most Christians in America do not have God's work in their budgets. They include everything else—their houses, cars, clothing, food and entertainment allowance—but not God Himself.

One of our elders at that time was the CEO of a large savings and loan institution. One day he commented that he had processed loans for hundreds of Christians, and as he did with all applicants, he always asked for their budgets. "Gene," he said, "over the years I can count on one hand the number of Christians who have God in their budgets." The fact is that if Christians planned their expenditures so that they never left God out of the picture—in the good times and in the rough times—God's work would never suffer. As it is, God often gets what is left over, if anything.

The Selfish Majority

Some researchers tell us that the average Christian gives only about two percent of his or her income to the Lord. We're also told that among this population are approximately 15 percent who tithe (give one-tenth of their income). If this statistic becomes part of the average, the majority of American Christians give next to nothing. There is only one conclusion: Most of us are lovers of money. As a whole we have become materialists, which is a direct violation of the will of God.

A Matter of Priorities

What comes first in our lives? Is it God or money? We can't serve both (see Matt. 6:24). Jesus taught us to "seek first His kingdom and His righteousness, and all these things [the necessities of life] will be added to you" (v. 33). Jesus simply taught that a man who loves money lays up "treasures on earth" rather than "treasures in heaven" (vv. 19-20). Jesus also said, "Where your treasure is, there your heart will be also" (v. 21).

Christians who love money are more earthly minded than heavenly minded. To them, worldly possessions, activities and benefits are far more important than eternal values. They're constantly seeking after more and more. Selfishness and pride take over. This is why the Scriptures warn us:

Make sure that your character is free from the love of money, being content with what you have; for He Himself has said, "I will never desert you, nor will I ever forsake you" (Heb. 13:5).

An Age-Old Problem

Forgetting God when earthly possessions multiply is not new. The children of Israel faced this temptation when they entered the Promised Land. Moses cautioned them ahead of time that this temptation would come. Note his words of warning in Deuteronomy:

Then it shall come about when the LORD your God brings you into the land . . . to give you, great and splendid cities which you did not build, and houses full of all good things which you did not fill, and hewn cisterns which you did not dig, vineyards and olive trees which you did not plant, and you eat and are satisfied, then watch yourself, that you do not forget the LORD who brought you from the land of Egypt, out of the house of slavery (6:10-12).

Moses added another powerful warning later in this passage when he cautioned them that they would be tempted to say in their hearts, “My power and the strength of my hand made me this wealth” (8:17). Unfortunately, this is exactly what happened.

A Tragic Epitaph

The most tragic words in the Old Testament are recorded in the book of Judges, which describe what happened once the children of Israel entered the Promised Land. In spite of Moses’ warnings, after Joshua had died, the Holy Spirit etched these words in the scriptural record—words that in many respects form an epitaph on Israel’s tombstone:

And there arose another generation after them who did not know the LORD, nor yet the work which He had done for Israel. So they forsook the LORD and served Baal and the Ashtaroth (2:10,13).

It Has Happened Again

How could this be? The fact is, it took only one generation for degeneration to take place. But stop and think for a moment. Do you realize that this is exactly what has happened in our own American society?

No Absolutes

When the Supreme Court of the United States changed the rules and began to make decisions based upon a set of values that contradicted the Hebrew-Christian traditions that guided our nation for our first 200 years, our lives changed dramatically. Everything became relative. We had no absolute standard by which to make judgments regarding morality, crime, rules of government, business ethics, what is taught in our schools and so on. We have done the very same thing Israel did. As we looked about us and saw our prosperity, we concluded that “My power and the strength of my hand made me this wealth.” The apostle Paul said it best. In the latter days, “Men will be lovers of self, lovers of money, . . . lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God” (2 Tim. 3:2,4).

Cultural Spillover

Unfortunately, this new set of values has flowed over into the Christian community. If we are honest, we will admit this is true.

Don’t misunderstand. There are exceptions. But when we look, for example, at the giving patterns of Christians at large, we can only conclude one thing: We have become lovers of money. We practice what our worldly counterparts do.

What has happened shouldn't surprise us. It is a human tendency that has been verified throughout human history. We can become so wrapped up in the material side of life that we lose spiritual perspective. Money can quickly become an end in itself rather than a means to godly ends.

A Tragic Story

I had the privilege of sharing in a camp ministry for a week with a doctor who was serving as a medical missionary in Africa. During the course of the week, he related a tragic story. He shared about a man God had used to challenge him to become a medical missionary. This man was also a doctor. He, too, had planned to go to the same hospital in Africa. But he changed his mind and decided to stay in the United States. He became very successful, building a large and prosperous practice. From the world's point of view, he had everything he wanted. But something went wrong. After three unsuccessful marriages, and while still a young man, he committed suicide.

By contrast, the doctor who gave up fame and fortune (from a human perspective) continues to treat hundreds of African patients every week and sees many of them come to know Jesus Christ as their personal Savior.

This story does not put a premium on poverty, nor is it meant to chide Christian doctors who don't become missionaries and who earn a lot of money. But it does illustrate graphically that love money and the things money buys does not in itself make a man happy. It can instead lead to a bitter and tragic end.

Paul issued a solemn warning in his first letter to Timothy:

But those who want to get rich fall into temptation and a snare and many foolish and harmful desires which plunge men into ruin and destruction. For the love of money is a root of all sorts of evil, and some by longing for it have wandered away from the faith and pierced themselves with many griefs (6:9-10).

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you evaluate your motives regarding money and material things.

Evaluate Your Priorities

Discover what is most important in your life. Make a list of those things that are priorities in your life. Try to be completely honest. Write down those things that appear first in your mind.

Establish Biblical Priorities

Refocus your priorities in the light of biblical values. To do this, ask yourself the following questions: Where is my heart? What motivates me the most? What am I doing with my money? Can I justify my expenditures in the light of eternal values? How much am I giving to the Lord on a regular and systematic basis?

Read carefully the following passages of Scripture to help you rearrange your priorities: Proverbs 15:27; 23:4,5; 30:7-9; Ecclesiastes 5:10; Matthew 6:19-34; 2 Corinthians 8; 9; 1 Timothy 6:6-10.

Follow Biblical Principles

Be a generous Christian by following these eight biblical principles:

1. Give regularly

We should set aside a certain percentage of our income just as regularly as we are paid in order to systematically give to God's work (see 1 Cor. 16:1-2).

2. Plan ahead

We should be joyful, willing givers by planning ahead (see 2 Cor. 9:5).

3. Give proportionately

We are only being truly generous when we are proportional in our giving (see v. 6).

4. Model generosity

We should model generosity to others. Considering that the Macedonians gave out of poverty, should we not be a model in giving out of plenty (see 8:1-2)?

5. Be accountable

We need to be accountable regarding the way we use—or do not use—our income to support God's work (see v. 6; 9:3-4).

6. Begin now

God accepts and honors our gifts once we begin to give regularly and systematically, although we may not give as proportionately as we will once we have our economic lives in order (see 8:12).

7. Give by faith

We should trust God for future income and for the portion that we can give to God's work (see 9:5).

8. Trust God

God will meet our needs when we put Him first. He will not necessarily give us all we want, but He will take care of us (see v. 8).

Set Goals

Set up specific goals for your life that are in harmony with biblical principles. The following are four additional biblical guidelines:

1. Put God first

The love of money is wrong. We must not value material things above spiritual things. To accumulate money for purely personal gain, prestige and power is sinful.

2. Be honest

To obtain money in deceitful or dishonest ways is a violation of God's laws.

3. Help others

We are to use our material possessions to care for other Christians who are in need.

4. Be industrious

We must never be lazy and irresponsible, living off other people. This is sinful (see 2 Thess. 3:10).

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Why do people get unusually uncomfortable when they hear messages on money?
- How can we keep our motives pure when it comes to accumulating material possessions?
- When is enough enough?
- What is your greatest temptation regarding money?
- What biblical principles of giving do you violate the most? Would you be willing to share this with us for prayer?
- What goals would you like to set for becoming a generous Christian?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 16

Fathering God's Way

Manages his own household well

“God Is Our Heavenly Daddy”

My children are all adults, but I'll never forget overhearing my four- and five-year-old daughters having an animated discussion in the living room. The youngest suddenly had a burst of insight and said to the oldest, “Hey, Renee, God is our heavenly daddy.” The oldest, who has always been philosophical, wasn't quite sure how she felt about that comment and so the discussion continued. “But He is,” Robyn insisted. “He's our heavenly daddy.”

Frankly, I was startled. It suddenly dawned on me that their image of God was their image of me. What an awesome thought! Needless to say, right there and then I made a deeper commitment to exemplify Jesus Christ in order to help my children develop a correct perspective intellectually and emotionally regarding their heavenly Father.

Projection or Reality?

The father image is an important reality—biblically and psychologically. Sigmund Freud first saw the implications, but he drew false conclusions because he didn't believe in the God of the Bible. In fact, he was an atheist. His presuppositions were naturalistic. Consequently, he concluded that because people seem to need some kind of supernatural support system, the image of God that people have is a projection of their need for a father image. He believed that God existed only in the minds of people, which is a reflection of their insecurity. In other words, God is a mental and emotional projection of their inner needs.

Freud was incorrect regarding his view of God, but he was right in his observations that we develop certain ideas about God because of various kinds of experiences with parents—particularly fathers. After all, we tell our children God is a heavenly Father. Like my own daughters, they eventually made the connection. God, who is an eternal Spirit and invisible, gradually takes on the same characteristics in children's minds as an earthly father. If a father is kind and loving, so is God, in the child's perceptions. If the father is cold and distant—even cruel—so is God.

Emotional Scars

I remember sharing Christ with a young woman who had been sexually abused by her father. As always, this horrible experience left this young woman emotionally and spiritually scarred. Her feelings of resentment were often overwhelming.

As I shared the gospel with her, I explained how she could become a Christian by accepting the Lord Jesus Christ as her personal Savior. She was willing to take this step, so I began to pray, asking her to repeat after me. I began, “Heavenly Father, thank you for sending Jesus Christ to be my Savior.”

She was silent. I thought perhaps she had misunderstood what I was asking her to do. “Is there something wrong?” I asked. Her response jolted me. “I can’t say those words!” she blurted out.

Suddenly, I understood. She couldn’t use the word “father.” Earlier, she had poured out her dismal story. The very word brought back horrible memories of sexual abuse that were too painful, too reminiscent of her experience as a child with her own father. Needless to say, as we prayed together, I had to avoid using the word “father.”

Years later I talked with this woman at a special birthday party held in her honor. “Do you remember,” I asked, “when you couldn’t use the word ‘father’?” She smiled and nodded her head. After a period of healing, she could now address God as her heavenly Father. Her mental and emotional image had changed. She understood what true fatherhood is all about.

A Goal for Every Christian Man

Paul made it clear in his letters to Timothy and Titus that a mark of maturity, or immaturity, in a man is the way he functions as a father in his home. His children particularly will reflect how well he has fulfilled this God-ordained role. If he is mature, Paul told Timothy, a man will be able to keep “his children under control with all dignity” (1 Tim. 3:4). Paul told Titus that this kind of father will have “children who believe” and who are “not accused of dissipation or rebellion” (Titus 1:6).

Having a well-ordered household should be a goal for every Christian man.

A mark of maturity, or immaturity, in a man is the way he functions as a father in his home.

As Husbands

We should love our wives “just as Christ also loved the church” (Eph. 5:25). We should live with them “in an understanding way” and grant them “honor as a fellow heir of the grace of life” (1 Pet. 3:7). Peter warns us that if we don’t live this way with our wives, it will affect how God responds to our prayers.

As Fathers

We should never provoke our children to anger “but bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord” (Eph. 6:4). Paul illustrated this concept with an illustration from his own ministry. Writing to the Thessalonians, Paul reminded them that he ministered among them “as a father would his own children.” He personalized his ministry by “encouraging and imploring each one,” which demonstrates how Paul viewed a father’s ministry to “each one of . . . his own children” (1 Thess. 2:11). Christian fathers should rear not just a family but individual children in that family. Each child has a different personality and needs individualized attention according to his or her own natural bent. This, I believe, is what Proverbs 22:6 means:

Train up a child in the way he should go, even when he is old he will not depart from it.

Some Serious Misunderstandings

It is easy to misinterpret what Paul taught when he stated that a mature man is “one who manages his own household well, keeping his children under control with all dignity” (1 Tim. 3:4). Let’s look at what Paul does not mean.

Paul Was Not Specifying That It Is Necessary to Have Children to Be a Spiritual Leader in the Church

I don’t believe Paul was saying a man must be married to be a pastor or elder. If this was what he meant, he would have excluded himself, because it appears he may never have been married. Rather, Paul was simply saying that if a man is married, and if he has children, then he should have a well-ordered household. It follows, of course, that if a man becomes a spiritual leader before he has a family, and then fails to measure up to Paul’s criteria, he should evaluate whether or not he should continue as a spiritual leader in the Church.

Paul Was Not Referring to Younger Children

Several words are used to describe children in the New Testament. The word Paul used in both his letters to Timothy and Titus is a general word used for offspring. This word could be used to refer to small children, but the total context indicates that Paul was referring to adult children. For example, he used the terms “dissipation” and “rebellion” (Titus 1:6). These words refer to a person who is living a riotous and immoral life, characteristics that could only be true of an older offspring.

Eli is an Old Testament illustration of what Paul was saying. Both of Eli’s grown sons “did not know the LORD” (1 Sam. 2:12). They were both immoral and they “despised the offering of the LORD” (v. 17). The Lord described them as “worthless men” (v. 12). Consequently, God judged both Eli and his sons. We read that the “sons brought a curse on themselves,” and Eli was disciplined by the Lord because “he did not rebuke them” (3:13).

Paul Was Not Referring to Normal Patterns of Child Growth and Development

All small children as well as teenagers go through natural phases of growth. Some people have concluded that when children and youth go through these natural stages and attempt to establish their own identities, they are guilty of the kind of rebellion described by Paul in these letters. The fact is that there is no relationship between these passing phases and the attitudes and actions Paul described.

Because of this misinterpretation, some spiritual leaders come down too hard on their own children for the sake of their own reputations. They attempt to get their children to conform to certain behavioral patterns so that other Christians in the Church do not criticize them as spiritual leaders.

A Higher Standard Breeds Rebellion. Children resent a higher standard for themselves simply because their parents happen to be spiritual leaders in the Church. And they really resent being told they are to be good so that their dad looks good. Ultimately, this kind of motivation will backfire. As children grow into adulthood, it may actually create the kind of rebellion Paul was talking about in his letters to Timothy and Titus.

Performance Standards Can Be Lethal. A pastor friend of mine overheard his son being reprimanded by another leader in the Church. Admonishing this young man, he said, “I certainly would expect more from you than that, being the preacher’s son.”

My pastor friend, a gracious and mature Christian, took the fellow leader aside and lovingly but directly let him know he never wanted that kind of reprimand to happen again.

Please understand. My friend was not defending his son’s inappropriate behavior. Rather, he was concerned that his son not think he was under some kind of performance standard just because he was the “preacher’s kid.”

“If my son is out of order,” my pastor friend said, “come to me and I’ll discipline him. Or if he needs immediate discipline and I am not available, don’t use my position as a weapon against him.” Needless to say, this was courageous and appropriate advice.

As long as we are in this world, we will be victims of imperfection. Satan will see to that.

Paul Was Not Speaking of a Man Who Has a Perfect Family

As there is no perfect church, there is no perfect family. There is no perfect husband or father, just as there is no perfect wife or mother, and there certainly is no perfect child. All Christians have problems in their family lives. As long as we are in this world, we will be victims of imperfection. Satan will see to that.

We should certainly strive to have a family that reflects the life of Jesus Christ. Just as every Christian is in the process of becoming more and more like Jesus Christ, so every family should be in the process of growing spiritually.

Paul Was Not Talking About Being a Successful Businessman

Unfortunately, many Christians have made the mistake of judging capabilities for spiritual leadership on the basis of how well a man runs and operates his business, how efficient he is, how smart he is and how much money he makes.

Through the years, I have noticed that a man who manages his own household well will usually also manage his business well. But the reverse is not always true. On many occasions, I have observed that men may have very successful businesses, but their families are falling apart.

What Paul is telling us is that the way a man leads his family is the true test of maturity. Through administrative skill and business acumen, some men have built great financial empires. But when it comes to their family lives, these men aren't able to communicate effectively with either their wives or their children. In some instances, they are so busy they haven't taken the time to be good husbands and fathers.

Paul Was Not Talking About How Well a Man Can Do Church Work

Some pastors, missionaries and lay leaders are well-known for their achievements in the ministry. They have built large churches, they have led countless numbers to Jesus Christ and they are active in doing the Lord's work. On the surface, they appear to be successful Christian leaders. But sadly, their families have disintegrated.

When this happens, they too often neglect their own wives and children. In some instances, their own sons and daughters grow up rejecting Jesus Christ and resenting Christian work because it has taken their parents away from them.

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you become a good husband and father—to have a well-ordered household.

Earn Respect

We cannot demand or force respect and love. Fathers who have their “children under control with all dignity” (1 Tim. 3:4) have created this kind of family. This does not mean they have only taught what is right and wrong, but they have built this teaching on their own consistent walk with Jesus Christ. They have not provoked their “children to anger” (Eph. 6:4). They have not exasperated their children so that they have become discouraged (see Col. 3:21). Rather, they have followed the ministry model Paul wrote to the Thessalonians:

You are witnesses, and so is God, how devoutly and uprightly and blamelessly we behaved toward you believers; just as you know how we were exhorting and encouraging and imploring each one of you as a father would his own children, so that you would walk in a manner worthy of the God who calls you into His own kingdom and glory (1 Thess. 2:10-12).

Ask Forgiveness

I remember on one occasion my son invited his friend to come home after church. Both of them were about eight years old at the time. Dinner was almost ready, but they still had time to go out to play. I clearly instructed Kenton not to go far so they could hear when I announced that dinner was ready.

A few minutes later, I went to the door and called, but there was no answer. I walked around the house and called again and again, but still no response. Frankly, I became angry. To me, it was a flagrant act of disobedience. I had made the message clear and repeated it several times.

A Bad Judgment. Right there and then I determined what I was going to do. We went ahead and began eating. About 10 minutes later, Kenton and his friend walked into the house. I got up from my chair, marched my son into his own room, closed the door and proceeded to give him a good spanking. Explanations were minimal. After all, I had made my instructions clear. Furthermore, I wasn't in the mood to listen to anything he had to say during the ordeal.

As I emerged from Kenton's room, my wife sensitively took me aside and informed me I had made a bad judgment. What Kenton had tried to explain to me was that his mother had instructed him previously on an important lesson he needed to learn: to pay attention to his friend and to try to do the things his friend wanted to do while he was visiting in our home.

As events unfolded, his friend had wanted to go down the alley to the creek. Kenton, attempting to follow his mother's instructions, proceeded to do what his friend wanted to do. In his own way, he was trying to practice hospitality, to put his friend's desires first. I found out later that was what he was trying to explain to me, but I wouldn't listen.

I Knew What I Had to Do. Embarrassed and chagrined, I asked Kenton to forgive me for several things. First, I had misunderstood him because I wouldn't listen. Second, I had embarrassed him in front of his friend, which was probably more painful than the spanking. Third, I had allowed my own anger to interfere with good judgment. Had I been wise, I would have discussed the situation with my wife before I ever took action.

As you might expect, Kenton forgave me. In fact, we have discussed this situation several times since then. As we have talked, it has become clear to me that his intentions and motives were right. He had been caught between two authority figures, and his mother's instructions were far more important in his mind at that moment.

A Valuable Lesson. I have learned through the years that it takes effort to understand children. My wife has taught me more about this than anyone. We must listen to our children. We must not become so preoccupied with our own world and needs that we don't know what is going on in their minds. If we don't know them and understand them, we'll not make proper decisions, even in the area of discipline.

Unfortunately, we all have made mistakes. When it happens, ask your children to forgive you. You'll be amazed at how they'll respond. In some instances, they may not respond as you hope, simply because their hurt is very deep. But continue loving them, and hopefully someday they'll respond positively.

Consult Your Wife

The following are some questions that will help you improve your relationship with your family:

- How can I become a better husband? What are my strengths? In what areas can I improve?
- How can I become a better father? What are my strengths? In what areas can I improve?

Consult the Scriptures

I have found two passages to be especially helpful. The first has helped me as a husband. The second focuses on being a good father.

1. Loving my wife as Christ loves me:

Have this attitude in yourselves which was also in Christ Jesus, who, although He existed in the form of God, did not regard equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a bond-servant, and being made in the likeness of men. Being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death on a cross (Phil. 2:5-8)

2. Being a good father:

You shall love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might. These words, which I am commanding you today, shall be on your heart. You shall teach them diligently to your sons [children] and shall talk of them when you sit in your house and when you walk by the way and when you lie down and when you rise up. And you shall bind them as a sign on your hand and they shall be as frontals on your forehead. You shall write them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates (Deut. 6:5-9).

Set Goals

Write out specific goals for developing a well-ordered household. Base these goals first on biblical principles, and then on actual needs that have surfaced during this study. As you set your goals, be sure to include your wife in your planning. Pray together about the needs in your household. In some instances, you also may want to include your children in helping you set these goals. This will help you draw together as a family. It's always easier to be a part of something when you have been a part of the planning.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- What do you believe are the most significant areas most men need to consider to be better husbands and fathers?
- Can you share some of the steps you have already taken to be a better husband and father?
- Can you share an experience where you failed as a husband or a father, and then through asking for forgiveness, you saw significant changes take place in your family relationships?
- What specific prayer requests do you have for your own family?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 17

Loving God Wholeheartedly

Loving what is good TITUS 1:8

Overcoming “the Law of Sin and of Death” (Rom. 8:2)

Imagine for a moment what happens when a huge Boeing 747 taxis to the end of a runway ready to take off. When this jumbo jet is loaded with passengers, cargo and fuel, its total weight can reach 500 tons.

If we have a limited perspective on natural law, we could only conclude that the law of gravity demonstrates that this huge machine can never leave the ground. But there is another law that can overcome the law of gravity: the law of aerodynamics. When the pilot activates the airplane’s four great jet engines, the plane will lunge forward, move down the runway, lift off and climb skyward. In a matter of minutes, what seemingly should never have gotten off the runway is soaring at 40,000 feet. The power generated by those four engines is absolutely mind-boggling.

Why this illustration? Adam and Eve introduced all of us to the law of sin and of death. But when God sent Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit into this world, He activated another law that is greater than the law that keeps us earthbound. It’s the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. This law sets us “free from the law of sin and of death” (Rom. 8:2). When we sincerely put our faith in Jesus Christ and receive His gift of eternal life, God’s power is activated in our lives—the same power that raised Jesus Christ from the dead and seated Him at God’s “right hand” (Eph. 1:20). When this happens, “even when we were dead in our transgressions,” God raised us up with Christ “and seated us with Him in the heavenly places” (2:5-6). This power that saved us is also the same power that enables us to live a godly life while still on Earth (see 3:14-21). Because of this wonderful plan, we can love what is good (see Titus 1:8).

Specific Contrasts

Loving what is good is a mark of Christian maturity. It’s possible for every Christian to “overcome evil with good” (Rom. 12:21) because of our relationship with God through our faith in Jesus Christ. Let’s evaluate more specifically what Paul meant by loving what is good by looking at a paragraph he wrote in 2 Timothy. Here we see several significant contrasts:

But realize this, that in the last days difficult times will come. For men will be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, arrogant, revilers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, unloving, irreconcilable, malicious gossips, without self-control, brutal, haters of good, treacherous, reckless, conceited, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God (3:1-4).

Paul very crisply, and with four descriptive Greek words, described a person who does not love what is good:

- philautos “A lover of oneself”
- philarguros “A lover of money”
- philedonos “A lover of pleasure”
- philagathos “Haters of good”

Lovers of Self

Paul was certainly not teaching that we shouldn't feel good about ourselves. It's impossible to function as mature men without self-respect and a good self-image. Without a proper view of ourselves, we will not be able to love God and others as we should.

This is an important observation. Some Christians feel guilty when they feel good about themselves, which is definitely false guilt. Of all the people in the world, a Christian should have a good self-image. We are God's children. We are heirs together with Christ. We have been redeemed and forgiven of our sins. We were created in God's image to begin with, and though that image was marred by sin, it can be restored. We have the resources to become more and more conformed to the image of Jesus Christ.

On the other hand, a Christian man who loves himself is a victim of the “I, me and mine” syndrome. He is self-involved and self-oriented. His needs are central in all that he does. He is driven by self-interest. In short, he is selfish. Someone has said that the smallest package we have ever seen is a man wrapped up in himself.

Paul warned against this kind of attitude in his letter to the Philippians:

Do nothing from selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others (2:3-4).

It's impossible to function as mature men without self-respect and a good self-image.

Lovers of Money

As we pointed out in chapter 15, anyone who has a correct perspective on what the Bible teaches knows that Paul did not condemn money per se. Neither did he condemn people who have money. Rather, he warned people not to love money, “for the love of money is a root of all sorts of evil” (1 Tim. 6:10).

When we have money, it’s easy to love it. Jesus warned against this very thing, stating that it’s often difficult (but not impossible) for rich people to enter the kingdom of God. They have difficulty shifting their affections away from their material possessions in order to acknowledge that they need God.

Accumulating wealth can also create problems for believers. Writing to Timothy, Paul issued a stern warning:

But those who want to get rich fall into temptation and a snare and many foolish and harmful desires which plunge men into ruin and destruction (v. 9).

The late Robert Horton made an insightful observation. The greatest lesson he learned from life was that people who set their minds and hearts on money are equally disappointed whether they get it or whether they don’t.<sup>1</sup>

Lovers of Pleasure

Again, we must understand the positive aspects of this concept. God created our capacity for pleasure. From the beginning, God wanted Adam to be happy, which is one reason why He created Eve. He also created a beautiful garden so that both Adam and Eve could enjoy its fruits and vegetables, as well as its beauty.

But many of the pleasures God created to be good became evil. It began when sin entered the world. Since that time, we’ve often taken what God created to be good and for His glory and turned it into something that is wrong and sinful. What God designed for marriage, we’ve used illegitimately and even prostituted. What God designed for sustenance, we’ve abused and misused. We’ve made pleasure an end in itself and have used it in purely selfish ways that violate the will of God. As millions have discovered, pleasure in itself is a dead-end street. It never satisfies.

Haters of Good

Paul described a pagan mentality in 2 Timothy. In essence, he said that “in the last days” people will turn away from God (3:1). They will not love what is good. They will be openly hostile to Christianity and its values. They will be “haters of good” (v. 3).

We cannot read this passage of Scripture without thinking in terms of our own society. Today, we live in a culture that is rapidly becoming post-Christian. Without question, people are more and more becoming lovers of themselves, lovers of money and lovers of pleasure, rather than “lovers of God” (v. 4). As Christians, we must face this reality. We are living in the midst of a cultural war. Biblical values for many people are no longer sacred—from the White House to the average American’s home.

To what extent am I allowing my life to conform to the world’s attitudes and actions? To what extent am I focusing on myself, my material possessions and the pleasures of this life? These are the questions every Christian man must ask himself.

Philotheos—The Key to Balance

In this same passage, Paul gives us the key to balance. He contrasts those who love themselves, their money and pleasure with those who are lovers of God (philotheos). It is this love that keeps everything in proper perspective.

Which Is the Greatest Commandment?

One day a lawyer came to Jesus, trying to trick Him, and asked Him the following question: “Teacher, which is the great commandment in the Law?” (Matt. 22:36). Jesus’ answer explains what Paul had in mind when he contrasted being lovers of God with love for ourselves, our money and our pleasure:

And He said to him, “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.” This is the great and foremost commandment. The second is like it, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself.” On these two commandments depend the whole Law and the Prophets (vv. 37-40).

That Your Joy May Be Full

If we love God as we should, we will live within His will as He has revealed it in the Word of God. Jesus reinforced this concept when He said to the disciples:

Just as the Father has loved Me, I have also loved you; abide in My love. If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love; just as I have kept My Father’s commandments and abide in His love. These things I have spoken to you so that My joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full (John 15:9-11).

The only way to true happiness and lasting joy and pleasure that satisfies is to live within the will of God. Then, and only then, all that God has created for us to enjoy will become really enduring.

*The only way to
lasting joy and pleasure that satisfies is to live within the will of God.*

Loving What Is Good Is Loving God

The extent to which I love God and reflect that love by doing His will revealed in the Word of God is also the degree to which I love what is good. Consequently, the real questions I must face are, Do I really love God? How much do I really love God?

Points of Action

The following project is designed to help you evaluate the extent to which you love what is good.

Meditate

Read the following Scriptures and reflect on God's truth, particularly the concept of loving what is good:

He who steals must steal no longer; but rather he must labor, performing with his own hands what is good, so that he will have something to share with one who has need (Eph. 4:28).

Let no unwholesome word proceed from your mouth, but only such a word as is good for edification according to the need of the moment, so that it will give grace to those who hear (v. 29).

For this reason also, since the day we heard of it, we have not ceased to pray for you and to ask that you may be filled with the knowledge of His will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding, so that you will walk in a manner worthy of the Lord, to please Him in all respects, bearing fruit in every good work (Col. 1:9-10).

All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for training in righteousness; so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work (2 Tim. 3:16-17).

But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, reasonable, full of mercy and good fruits, unwavering, without hypocrisy (Jas. 3:17).

Evaluate

Read the following four questions and Scripture verses and evaluate your life to determine the degree to which you are “loving what is good.”

1. Do I take advantage of opportunities to do good to all men—both Christians and non-Christians?

So then, while we have opportunity, let us do good to all people, and especially to those who are of the household of the faith (Gal. 6:10).

Remind them to be subject to rulers, to authorities, to be obedient, to be ready for every good deed, to malign no one, to be peaceable, gentle, showing every consideration for all men (Titus 3:1-2).

2. Am I using my material resources to help others in need?

Now this I say, he who sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, and he who sows bountifully will also reap bountifully. Each one must do just as he has purposed in his heart, not grudgingly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound to you, so that always having all sufficiency in everything, you may have an abundance for every good deed (2 Cor. 9:6-8).

3. Do I have a good conscience about my behavior?

This command I entrust to you, Timothy, my son, in accordance with the prophecies previously made concerning you, that by them you fight the good fight, keeping faith and a good conscience, which some have rejected and suffered shipwreck in regard to their faith (1 Tim. 1:18-19).

4. Am I truly concerned about the unity of the Body of Christ?

Who among you is wise and understanding? Let him show by his good behavior his deeds in the gentleness of wisdom. But if you have bitter jealousy and selfish ambition in your heart, do not be arrogant and so lie against the truth. This wisdom is not that which comes down from above, but is earthly, natural, demonic. For where jealousy and selfish ambition exist, there is disorder and every evil thing. But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, reasonable, full of mercy and good fruits, unwavering, without hypocrisy (Jas. 3:13-17).

To sum up, all of you be harmonious, sympathetic, brotherly, kindhearted, and humble in spirit; not returning evil for evil or insult for insult, but giving a blessing instead; for you were called for the very purpose that you might inherit a blessing. “He must turn away from evil and do good; he must seek peace and pursue it” (1 Pet. 3:8-9,11).

Dedicate

Have you truly presented your total life to Jesus Christ without reservation? It is only as you do so that you’ll be able discover day by day God’s perfect will, “which is good and acceptable and perfect” (Rom. 12:2). As you read the following verses, dedicate your life to Jesus Christ. Note that “to present your bodies” is a once-for-all event, but “the renewing of your mind” is a process of becoming more and more like Jesus Christ:

Therefore I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living and holy sacrifice, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service of worship. And do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may prove what the will of God is, that which is good and acceptable and perfect (vv. 1-2).

Trust God

Now that you have done your part, trust God to do His. Note that when Paul wrote to the Philippians, he exemplified this trust:

For I am confident of this very thing, that He who began a good work in you will perfect it until the day of Christ Jesus (1:6).

When the author of Hebrews wrote his letter, he prayed the following prayer. Personalize this prayer for your own life:

Now the God of peace, who brought up from the dead the great Shepherd of the sheep through the blood of the eternal covenant, even Jesus our Lord, equip you in every good thing to do His will, working in us that which is pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be the glory forever and ever. Amen (13:20-21).

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Why is it often difficult for Christian men to love what is good?
- What scriptural statements in this chapter meant the most to you and why?
- What aspects of your life would you like to change in order to be able to love God more?
- Why do we sometimes fail to realize that the degree to which we love God is the degree to which we love what is good?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you'd like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 18

Being Just and Upright

Just

I Almost Blew It!

On one occasion, a former student of mine stopped by my office unannounced. It was one of those hectic days. I had been up since 3:30 A.M. working on a writing project. When he arrived, I was just completing a rather heavy meeting in the middle of the afternoon and was about to crash and call it quits for the day. Frankly, I didn't feel like seeing anyone, let alone talking to someone. But I knew in my heart I couldn't say no.

Although I hadn't seen this man for years, I recognized his name and invited him into my office, hoping it would only take a few minutes. But God had other plans. After some small talk, he began to unfold a sad story, one he said he had not intended to tell. After graduation from the school where I taught, he married a girl who was also one of my students. He became a pastor.

A Marital Disaster

From the beginning, his marriage was in trouble. Every story always has two sides, but I believe I heard enough and knew enough to conclude that his report was fairly accurate. His wife became a thorn in his side, a millstone around his neck. She was always hurting other people's feelings in his congregation, creating divisions, gossiping and keeping his own family in a state of confusion. His life as a pastor was filled with embarrassment and heartache. After a number of years, he became so frustrated that he gave up. In anger and resentment, he divorced her and left the ministry.

A Root of Bitterness

When he arrived in my office that day, he had been wandering in the wilderness for nearly three years. He admitted that he had sinned during that time, becoming involved sexually with another woman. In recent months, he had broken off the relationship because he knew it was wrong. He felt helpless, frustrated and rejected by even his closest friends. The people in his former church, to whom he had given his life for many years, had dropped him like a hot potato. Although they knew his life had been a living hell, no one had reached out to help him.

One day he had stopped to see another pastor he knew well. The pastor was just concluding a counseling session and his secretary called him on the intercom telling him who was waiting. The pastor responded by saying he was too busy—too busy to step out of his office and say hello to a man he definitely knew was hurting.

As this man related his story, he suddenly broke down and wept. He wasn't justifying himself. He acknowledged his anger and his bitterness. He confessed his guilt about the fact that he had finally given up and divorced his wife and left the ministry, even though four well-known pastors had advised him that he probably didn't have any choice in the matter. "But, Gene," he said through tears, “the man wouldn’t even say hello to me!”

My own heart skipped a beat. I had almost done the same thing that afternoon. Thank God, the Holy Spirit didn’t let me do it, as tired as I was. I sat and listened to his story for more than two hours. I literally felt his pain.

After listening, I suggested some biblical steps for getting his life back in order and in harmony with the will of God. I’ll never forget his response. He looked down and tried to fight the tears. “Gene, what you just said means more to me than anything I’ve heard for the last three years. Though I may never bother you again and though I may not take your advice totally, I know you care, and right now I just need a friend who will listen.”

I would be dishonest if I told you it was easy at that moment to be just and upright and caring. It’s impossible for me to talk with everyone who wants to share a burden. If I tried, I would probably end up in desperate straits myself. But I thank God I didn’t let that one pass me by. And the good news is, the man eventually responded and is now once again walking with the Lord.

Two Basic Meanings

New Testament writers used the word “just” (dikaios) in two basic ways. First, to become just describes what happens when we are saved. Second, to be just describes the way we should live after we are saved. Obviously, Paul had the second meaning in mind when he used dikaios to describe a quality of Christian maturity.

More specifically, it seems Paul used the word “just” in his letter to Titus to describe a person who does what is right or fair. In this sense, a just man is equitable and impartial. For example, when he makes decisions, they are just decisions. Stating it another way, a just man is someone who is righteous and upright in all of his relationships. Thankfully, the Lord enabled me to demonstrate this quality with my former student, although I almost made a tragic mistake. Often, being just involves making the right decision at the right moment.

righteous and*

relationships.*

“The Just Shall Live by Faith” (Rom. 1:17, KJV)

In November 1515, an Augustinian monk named Martin Luther began to teach the book of Romans to his students at the University of Wittenberg. As professor of sacred theology, he labored long and hard in preparing his lectures. He was captivated and challenged by what Paul stated about justification by faith. “I greatly long to understand Paul’s Epistle to the Romans,” he later wrote, “and nothing stood in the way but that one expression, ‘the righteousness of God,’ because I took it to mean that righteousness whereby God is righteous and deals righteously in punishing the unrighteous.”

After wrestling in his mind with this concept for a long period of time, the Holy Spirit eventually penetrated Luther’s heart. He suddenly “grasped the truth that the righteousness of God is that righteousness whereby, through grace and sheer mercy, He justifies us by faith. Thereupon,” Luther testified, “I felt myself to be reborn and have gone through open doors into paradise. The whole of Scripture took on a new meaning, and whereas before ‘the righteousness of God’ had filled me with hate, now it became to me an inexpressibly sweet and greater love. This passage of Paul became to me a gateway to heaven.”<sup>1</sup>

Luther’s experience describes the most foundational way dikaios and related words are used by New Testament writers to describe what happens to a person who comes to know Jesus Christ as personal Lord and Savior. Paul stated this clearly in his letter to the Romans, although it took Luther a long time to grasp this truth:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness [dikaiousune] of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, the just [dikaios] shall live by faith (1:16-17, KJV; see Gal. 3:11; Heb. 10:38).

Positional Righteousness

In Romans 1:16-17, and in many other references, Paul was referring to what theologians call “positional righteousness.” When we put our faith in Jesus Christ for salvation, God sees us as being as righteous as Christ Himself. This is the only way any person can ever be saved. Jesus Christ Himself is our righteousness (see 1 Cor. 1:30). This is the great truth that changed Martin Luther’s life. In the words of Jesus, he was “born again” (John 3:3). Not only did this great truth in Paul’s letter to the Romans change Luther’s life, but God also used him to help change the world. “The just shall live by faith” became his clarion call.

This should not surprise us, because Paul used some form of the word dikaios more than 20 times in the first five chapters of Romans to refer to the fact that we are made righteous or just in God’s sight by faith in Jesus Christ.

Justified Men Should Become Just Men

Once we truly understand and experience God's grace in justifying us and making us just or righteous in God's sight, it becomes a foundational experience in enabling and challenging us to become just in our walk with God and in our relationships with others. It should become a mark of Christian maturity, which is what Paul referred to in his letter to Titus. Of all people, justified men should become just men.

God dealt with us justly not because we deserved it, but because of His love, mercy and grace. This should motivate every Christian first of all to live a just and righteous life before God and, second, to deal justly with others.

Further on in his letter to Titus, Paul encouraged all Christians to demonstrate compassion, sensitivity and concern toward both Christians and non-Christians. Paul made this appeal based on what Jesus Christ has done for us. After Paul stated that we should show "every consideration for all men" (Titus 3:2), he said:

For we also once were foolish ourselves, disobedient, deceived, enslaved to various lusts and pleasures, spending our life in malice and envy, hateful, hating one another. But when the kindness of God our Savior and His love for mankind appeared, He saved us, not on the basis of deeds which we have done in righteousness, but according to His mercy, by the washing of regeneration and renewing by the Holy Spirit, whom He poured out upon us richly through Jesus Christ our Savior, so that being justified by His grace we would be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life (vv. 3-7).

A Case of Terrible Injustice

In October 1982, a young black man named Lenell Geter was sentenced to life in prison for allegedly robbing $615 from a fried-chicken restaurant in Greenville, Texas. Geter was a well-respected engineer and had no police record. Fortunately, after serving 477 days in prison, he was eventually exonerated and released.

Geter had been falsely accused. Both racial prejudice and shoddy police work precipitated this horrible injustice. Those of you who may have watched the exposé on 60 Minutes will remember the shameful way this case was originally handled.

Unfortunately, a lot of injustice occurs in this world—sadly we can do little about much of it. In some situations, we must wait for God to set the record straight, even in areas where we believe we and others have been treated unjustly. We must turn the matter over to the great judge of the universe. That is why Paul instructed the Roman Christians never to take their "own revenge" but to "leave room for the wrath of God" (Rom. 12:19).

A Supreme Court justice once said to a man who had appeared before him in one of the lower courts and escaped conviction on the basis of a technicality: "I know that you are guilty and you know it, and I wish you to remember that one day you will stand before a better and wiser Judge, and that there you will be dealt with according to justice and not according to law."<sup>2</sup>

Justice and Fairness

God gives us opportunities every day to practice justice and to be upright in our dealings with our fellow human beings, especially in our relationships with our immediate families, with our fellow Christians and with non-Christians who regularly cross our paths.

When Paul wrote to the Colossians and exhorted “masters” to grant to their slaves “justice and fairness, knowing that you too have a Master in heaven” (4:1), he illustrated what he had in mind when he told Titus that spiritually mature people are “just” (1:8). The translators of The Amplified New Testament captured this meaning when they rendered this concept as being “upright and fair-minded” (1:8).

Inexcusable, but It Happens

Through the years, I have seen people hurt—desperately hurt—because of self-centered, insensitive and hard-hearted Christians. One of the saddest comments I have ever heard from believers is that they would rather do business with non-Christians than with Christians, because Christians, they say, are more unfair, irresponsible and, in some cases, more ruthless than non-Christians.

I realize, as most people do, that one bad experience with a Christian can cause someone to generalize about every Christian. I have met believers who have written off Christianity—at least going to church—because they have had one bad experience with a so-called Christian leader. How unfortunate. I have met Christians who have written off a whole seminary because they have had a bad experience with a single graduate.

A Two-Way Street

We all tend to generalize, to judge groups by single encounters. This in itself reflects injustice, prejudice and unfair judgments. In a sense, the pot is calling the kettle black. It tells us that a lot of us are immature when it comes to practicing the quality of being just. It is a two-way street.

The fact is that this happens, which is all the more reason to live a righteous and God-fearing life. We also must realize that people simply expect more from people who claim to be followers of Jesus Christ.

A Shining Example

When it comes to being just in the way Paul used this word in his letter to Titus, I can't help but think about Joseph, Mary's husband. You know the story. Mary was engaged to be married to Joseph, but before they became husband and wife, she became pregnant through the power of the Holy Spirit (see Matt. 1:18). Needless to say, Joseph found himself in an embarrassing predicament. He was engaged—not legally married—and his wife-to-be was with child. Tongues were wagging. But note how Joseph responded, “And Joseph her husband, being a righteous [dikaios] man, and not wanting to disgrace her, planned to send her away secretly” (v. 19).

If we look casually at Joseph's response, we might conclude he was simply embarrassed and trying to protect himself. Not so! He was concerned for Mary because he was a just man. He understood her plight and the price she was paying to be the mother of the Son of God. He didn't want to expose her to public disgrace.

God Honors Justice

Mercifully, God stepped in and reassured Joseph that their predicament and humiliation were only temporary (see vv. 20-21). The pain they would have to bear, caused by those who were critical because of their ignorance, insensitivity and unbelief, would be well worth it when the angels sang from heaven, “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men with whom He is pleased” (Luke 2:14). And when the wise men from the East would later bring gifts, lay them at the feet of Jesus and recognize Him as a King, it would be worth it all.

May God give us more upright men who are willing to put their own egos behind them and be concerned for others.

Injustice Today

How many men do you know who have gotten women pregnant out of wedlock and then left them to bear the burden that resulted from a moment of lust and self-indulgence? Or, worse yet, they escaped their responsibilities with payoffs and helped the women get abortions.

Don't misunderstand. I am not putting all the blame on men. This kind of sin is usually a two-way street. But how easy it is to take advantage of someone else and then allow the person to struggle through the problem all alone. That is the ultimate in unjust behavior.

May God give us more upright men like Joseph—men who are willing to put their own egos behind them and be concerned for others.

Points of Action

The following project will help you develop the quality of being just in your relationships with others.

A Gift of God

Make sure you clearly understand Paul's statement that the "just shall live by faith" (Rom. 1:17, KJV). Remember that the Word of God uses the term "just" in two ways. The first involves your salvation experience. The second involves the way you live as a Christian.

Paul described both concepts in two wonderful verses in his letter to the Ephesians:

1. Your salvation experience

For by grace you have been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not as a result of works, so that no one may boast (2:8-9).

2. Your walk with Christ

For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand so that we would walk in them (v. 10).

What Paul described in this paragraph contains one of the most critical distinctions in Christian theology. As we have seen illustrated in Martin Luther's life, it's perhaps the one area that Satan uses most frequently to confuse people, in spite of the fact that it is one of the clearest teachings in Scripture. Unfortunately, this doctrinal error runs through every major religion in the world, including the offshoots of Christianity that we call cults and "isms."

The following are several ways this error is reflected. Check yourself. How well do you understand the salvation experience? All of the following are incorrect:

- A person can be saved by works.
- A person can be saved by a mixture of faith and works.
- A person can be saved by faith and keep himself saved by works.
- A person can be saved even though he doesn't demonstrate any works.

Some people believe that a simple profession of faith results in salvation. One thing is clear from Scripture: We are saved by faith, but true faith will eventually produce works. James made this point clear when he said, "Even so faith, if it has no works, is dead, being by itself" (2:17).

Saving faith will eventually produce the works of righteousness God planned for our lives. The extent to which we do these works, however, still depends on our commitment to Jesus Christ and our desire to do His will.

God's Workmanship

When James used Elijah to illustrate the power of prayer, he used the word dikaios to refer to a Christian who lives a godly life. This is why he exhorted:

Therefore, confess your sins to one another, and pray for one another so that you may be healed. The effective prayer of a righteous [just] man can accomplish much (5:16).

When New Testament writers used the word “just” in this sense, they meant that we are to live upright, righteous and holy lives as Christians. We are to obey God and keep His commandments. Once we are made righteous (just) by faith in Christ, then we are to reflect Christ’s righteous (just) life by the way we live. This is also what Paul meant when he wrote to the Ephesians:

For you were formerly darkness, but now you are Light in the Lord; walk as children of Light (for the fruit of the Light consists in all goodness and righteousness [dikaiousune] and truth), trying to learn what is pleasing to the Lord (5:8-10).

Your Relationships

Ask someone you trust to help you evaluate your relationships with others regarding the extent you are just, fair, impartial and equitable.

- Your relationship with your wife
- Your relationship with your children
- Your relationship with your neighbors
- Your relationship with your fellow employees
- Your relationship with others

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- When did you understand what it means to be justified by faith? Would you share your salvation experience?
- Why is it easy to get confused regarding how a person is saved?
- What experiences have you had (or observed) where people have been treated unjustly? How could things have been handled differently?
- Can you think of relationships where you would like to be treated more fairly and equitably? Would you share these concerns for prayer?
- Can you think of relationships where you would like to be more just and fair in your dealings with others? Would you share these concerns for prayer?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you’d like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 19

Living a Holy Life

Devout [holy]

Bleeding Knees

Several years ago, my wife and I visited Guatemala. In one small village, one of the missionaries drew our attention to a church that had a long series of steps leading up to a large courtyard. We then noticed people on their hands and knees, making their way up the concrete steps through the courtyard and then into the church. Their knees would eventually bleed as they crawled the hundreds of yards over the rough concrete surface.

What would cause people to engage in this kind of religious ritual? They actually believed that this was a way they could become holy and experience forgiveness for their sins. Although these people were obviously sincere, they were terribly misled.

Paul did say he wanted “men in every place to pray, lifting up holy hands” (1 Tim. 2:8), but nowhere does God say Christians are to have bleeding knees to obtain and maintain holiness.

This story illustrates a serious misperception regarding holiness. We can never earn holiness by engaging in religious rituals. Neither can we develop it by abusing our bodies. Let’s take a look at some of the other serious misunderstandings regarding this wonderful biblical truth.

Perfectionism

When Paul stated that being devout or holy is a mark of Christian maturity, he was not teaching that Christians can become perfect in this life. Most of us, if we’re honest, will acknowledge that we’re not living in every respect like Jesus Christ. He was the only perfect man who ever lived. He came to Earth as the God-man, and because He was God in the flesh, He never sinned (see John 1:1,14). As Christians, we’ll not be totally like Jesus Christ until we are transformed into His image when He comes again (see 1 Cor. 15:51-53). This, I believe, is what Paul had in mind when he wrote to the Corinthians:

For now we see in a mirror dimly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then I will know fully just as I also have been fully known (13:12).

Christians who are taught that they can become perfect in this life often suffer horrible guilt when they fail. Or to handle this guilt, they may rationalize sinful attitudes and actions as being un sinful, which is a form of self-deception and is sin in itself.

Others who take a perfectionistic approach to the Christian life simply give up when they sin. They believe they have failed God and have no real hope. Some also believe they have committed the unpardonable sin, which is a tragic point of view.

I had a close friend in high school who became a Christian approximately the same time I did.

Both of us were sincere people but theologically confused in certain areas. I thought I had to live a certain way to keep myself saved. My friend believed that all Christians can have an experience with God that enables them to reach a level of holiness that keeps them from sinning.

Eventually, I learned that my standing before God—my eternal salvation—was not dependent upon my good works as a Christian. What a relief! But sadly, my friend experienced moral failure. I remember talking with her one day only to discover that she believed God had given up on her because of her sin. Nothing I could say seemed to help her understand that God had not forsaken her. Rather, she had forsaken Him and didn't believe God would forgive her. Even the story of the prodigal son couldn't reach her. What she had been taught about holiness left her in a state of hopelessness. How tragic!

Asceticism

During the fourth century particularly, hundreds of people sought to escape temptation by punishing their bodies and by living as hermits. This happened primarily because many of the Greek philosophers taught that the body is evil and the spirit is good. Because our bodies do give us a lot of problems that lead us into sinful actions, it was relatively easy for Christians living at that time to synchronize this thinking with biblical theology.

Unfortunately, various forms of asceticism cause Christians to remove themselves from the world. This is a direct contradiction to what Jesus taught. We are to be “the light of the world” (Matt. 5:14). We are to let our “light shine before men” (v. 16) so that they may see our good works and glorify our Father who is in heaven. Paul also stated that we are to be in the world, but not part of the world (see 1 Cor. 5:9-10). In other words, it is possible to live in this world and still live a holy life. That is one of the reasons God has left us on Earth: to communicate His holiness to those who do not know God.

*It is possible to live
still live a holy life.*

Self-Denial

Paul was not teaching that Christians can become holy by denying themselves what God has created to be normal and natural. For example, some people today still take vows of chastity, giving up the right to be married. They believe this will make them holy in God's sight.

The Scriptures clearly teach that abstaining from legitimate sexual relations is not a sign of or a means to holiness. Vows of chastity have led to some of the worst forms of sexual immorality. Today, it has demonstrated itself in a groundswell of child abuse. Sadly, innocent people—children particularly—become victims of this false teaching.

Legalism

Some Christians believe they can become holy by following a set of rules. I grew up in this kind of religious community. Yet I noticed, even as a young Christian, that these people often reflected jealousy and pride. They were judgmental and prejudiced against people who were not a part of our particular religious community. They gossiped about one another and were often bitter. In essence, they overlooked those internal qualities that are so important to true holiness.

This is exactly what the Pharisees did on many occasions. They set up legalistic rules and then planned ways to circumvent those rules. Jesus condemned this kind of behavior (see Mark 7:9-13).

A Biblical Perspective

Positional Holiness

All Christians are perfectly holy in God's sight in terms of their position in Christ. For example, the Corinthians, as sinful and carnal as they were, were called "saints," or "those who have been sanctified in Christ Jesus" (1 Cor. 1:2). Literally, Paul called these people "holy ones" in spite of their sinful lifestyles.

Paul also underscored this truth in his letter to the Colossians when he identified these believers "as those who have been chosen of God, holy and beloved" (3:12). God, therefore, sees us as already perfect because of His perfect Son, Jesus Christ. If this were not true, no one could be saved. Theologians often call this great doctrinal truth "positional sanctification." In the mind of God, we are already set apart as His holy people. In His sight, we are already "glorified" (Rom. 8:30). This happens the moment we put our faith in Christ and are saved.

Progressive Holiness

Becoming holy and Christlike while on Earth is a process that should continue until we are with Jesus Christ in heaven. This is the great emphasis in the New Testament letters. Again and again we're instructed to become like Christ in His holiness. When writing to the Corinthians, Paul addressed their sins and urged them to pursue holy lives that reflected Christ's love and the fruit of the Holy Spirit (see 1 Cor. 13).

Commitment

Becoming holy as God intended involves an act of the will following our conversion to Jesus Christ. For example, in the first three chapters of Ephesians, Paul outlined our position in Christ. In the last three chapters, he instructed us to become like Christ—“to walk in a manner worthy of the calling with which you have been called” (4:1).

The degree to which we live holy lives depends upon the extent to which we keep in step with the Holy Spirit and His plan for our lives.

We see the same pattern in the letter to the Romans. The first 11 chapters outline in great detail God’s mercy in saving us. The remaining chapters describe how we are to live a holy life in view of God’s mercies (see Rom. 12:1-2).

The Holy Spirit

The degree to which we live holy lives depends upon the extent to which we keep in step with the Holy Spirit and His plan for our lives. Writing to the Galatians, Paul made this point very specific:

But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not carry out the desire of the flesh (5:16).

Every Christian has a choice. Either we “walk by the Spirit” (v. 25) and do what He desires, or we keep in step with the sinful nature and do what we desire. Either we choose to present our bodies “to sin as instruments of unrighteousness,” or we choose to present ourselves “to God as those alive from the dead,” and then yield our bodies “as instruments of righteousness to God” (Rom. 6:13). When we choose to yield to God, we choose to “walk by the Spirit” and to draw upon His strength and power in order to live holy and righteous lives (see Eph. 3:16-19).

The Fruit of the Spirit

A Christian who walks by the Spirit will reflect “the fruit of the Spirit” (Gal. 5:22) rather than “the deeds of the flesh” (v. 19). Paul outlined this “fruit”—a true reflection of holiness—and contrasted it with “the deeds of the flesh”:

- The deeds of the flesh

Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: immorality, impurity, sensuality, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, factions, envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these (vv. 19-21).

- The fruit of the Spirit

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control (vv. 22-23).

When we “walk in a manner worthy of the calling with which [we] have been called” (Eph. 4:1), we will reflect the fruit of the Spirit in all of our relationships.

The Spirit and the Word

The primary resource that enables us to walk in the Spirit is the Holy Spirit Himself working through the Word of God. Writing to the Colossians, Paul said:

Let the word of Christ richly dwell within you, with all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with thankfulness in your hearts to God (3:16).

Because the Holy Spirit is the divine author of Scripture, and because He indwells every believer, He enables us to live out these truths in our lives, if we yield our lives to Him (see Eph. 3:20-21).

Renewed Minds

The process of becoming holy is uniquely linked with how we use our minds. This is why Paul concluded his letter to the Philippians by saying:

A Beautiful Old Testament Example

Richard C. Trench, in his book Synonyms of the New Testament, traces the origin of three Greek words, hagios, hosios and hagnos, which are all translated “holy” or “devout” in the New Testament and used in their various forms approximately 300 times. He then uses Joseph as an illustration. He writes that when Joseph was “tempted to sin by his Egyptian mistress,” he “approved himself hosios in reverencing those everlasting sanctities of the marriage bond, which God had founded, and which he could not violate without sinning against Him.”<sup>1</sup> This is the word Paul used when he wrote to Titus in order to describe maturity.

Furthermore, Trench points out that Joseph “approved himself hagios in that he separated himself from any unholy fellowship with his temptress.” And finally, “he approved himself hagnos in that he kept his body pure and undefiled.”<sup>2</sup>

Joseph lived a holy life in all three dimensions:

- Before the Law was given at Mount Sinai
- Before Jesus Christ ever came to Earth to model holiness
- Before the Holy Spirit came to indwell and assist mankind in living a holy life
- Before the Word of God was revealed in its entirety

How much more should we as Christians be able to live a holy life today? We have all of these resources at our disposal.

Points of Action

This personal project is designed to help you develop the quality of living a more holy life.

Consult the Epistles

To understand holiness and how to live a holy life, we need to look carefully at the letters written to the New Testament churches as well as those letters written to individuals, such as Titus and Timothy, who were responsible for guiding these new and growing bodies of believers.

Check Yourself

As you read, develop a checklist based on exhortations outlined in each New Testament letter. The following is an example from Paul’s letter to the Ephesians. These are specific exhortations to live a devout or holy life. As you read through this checklist, evaluate how you measure up to God’s expectations. Give yourself a plus symbol (+) where you think you are doing fairly well. Give yourself a check mark (✓) where you would like to make some significant improvement.

___ “Laying aside falsehood, speak truth each one of you with his neighbor” (4:25).

___ “Be angry, and yet do not sin; do not let the sun go down on your anger” (v. 26).

___ “He who steals must steal no longer; but rather he must labor, performing with his own - hands what is good” (v. 28).

- ___ “Let no unwholesome word proceed from your mouth, but only such a word as is good for edification” (v. 29).
- ___ “Do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God” (v. 30).
- ___ “Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you, along with all malice” (v. 31).
- ___ “Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving each other” (v. 32).
- ___ “Walk in love, just as Christ also loved you” (5:2).
- ___ “But immorality or any impurity or greed must not even be named among you” (v. 3).
- ___ “There must be no filthiness and silly talk, or coarse jesting, which are not fitting, but rather giving of thanks” (v. 4).
- ___ “Walk as children of Light (for the fruit of the Light consists in all goodness and righteousness and truth)” (vv. 8-9).
- ___ “Do not participate in the unfruitful deeds of darkness, but instead even expose them” (v. 11).
- ___ “Be careful how you walk, not as unwise men but as wise, making the most of your time” (vv. 15-16).
- ___ “Do not be foolish, but understand what the will of the Lord is” (v. 17).

Personalize Paul’s Prayers

Read through Paul’s prayers for New Testament Christians, which are recorded in his prison Epistles, and personalize them. You’ll notice that most of these prayers focus on living a more holy or devout Christian life. For example, the following is the conclusion of Paul’s prayer for the Ephesian Christians. To personalize this prayer, simply insert personal pronouns such as “I,” “me” and “my.” You can also personalize this prayer for your group by inserting plural pronouns such as “us,” “we” and “our.”

For this reason I bow my knees before the Father, from whom every family in heaven and on earth derives its name, that He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with power through His Spirit in the inner man, so that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith; and that you, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which surpasses knowledge, that you may be filled up to all the fullness of God (3:14-19).

Note: You’ll find other prayers in Philippians 1:9-11 and Colossians 1:9-12.

Thinking and Growing Together

The following questions are designed for group discussion after reading and studying the content of this chapter:

- Why do most people want to do something to make themselves acceptable to God?
- Why do people confuse “salvation by grace through faith” with a “works approach” for salvation?
- Would you feel free to share for prayer some of the areas in your life in which you struggle the most in terms of reflecting God’s holiness?

Set a Goal

Write out one goal you’d like to achieve as a result of this study.

CHAPTER 20

Becoming a Disciplined Man

Self-controlled [disciplined]

A 26-Mile Run

When our daughter Robyn was a student at Baylor University, she decided to compete in her first marathon. She launched into a strict training program, running an average of six miles a day and 20 miles every Saturday. During this period, I well remember spending a day mountain climbing with her in Montana. I thought I was in fairly good shape physically, until I tried to keep up with her pace. By midafternoon I was in deep trouble; fortunately, I made it down without having to be carried off the mountain on a stretcher. She was prepared. I wasn't.

Robyn continued this regimen for several months. Frankly, I was rather amazed at her commitment and self-discipline. It paid off, because she completed her first race averaging an eight-and-a-half minute mile. What impressed me even more was her physical condition after she had run nonstop for 26 miles. Within five minutes, she was breathing normally and experiencing very little muscular discomfort. Because of her strict training program, she was in excellent physical condition. She not only disciplined herself by running, but also in a number of other ways, including her diet.

Temperate, Self-Controlled, Disciplined

As Paul concluded his maturity profile in his letter to Titus, he used the word egkrate, which is translated “temperate” in the King James Version, “self-controlled” in the New American Standard Bible and “disciplined” in the New International Version. Personally, I prefer the word “disciplined” for two reasons. First, this basic concept is used in ancient Greek literature to describe a person who is strong and robust. Second, Paul used this word in several athletic illustrations to describe the importance of being disciplined when living the Christian life.

The Greek and Roman Games

Paul was particularly intrigued with the athletic analogy. This is understandable. He grew up in Tarsus, a great center for athletic contests. Though a Jew, Paul grew up understanding Greek and Roman culture, particularly the commitment to develop physical strength and mental concentration in order to engage in vigorous competition in the various Olympic and Isthmian games.

The Isthmian games, second only to the Olympic games, were held every three years at Corinth. This is apparently why Paul used an athletic metaphor to make a spiritual point in his first letter to the Corinthian Christians. He used a form of egkrate in his letter to draw a parallel between living a disciplined Christian life and being a disciplined runner:

*We cannot reach the goal of becoming mature without being disciplined
“in all things.”*

Do you not know that those who run in a race all run, but only one receives the prize? Run in such a way that you may win. Everyone who competes in the games exercises self-control [self-discipline] in all things (9:24-25).

In essence, Robyn’s story is a modern-day elaboration on the metaphor Paul used in 1 Corinthians to illustrate what it takes to live a victorious Christian life. We cannot reach the goal of becoming mature without being disciplined “in all things.” This is why Paul exhorted Timothy, “Discipline yourself for the purpose of godliness” (1 Tim. 4:7). Here Paul used the word gumnazo, which means to exercise vigorously, either the body or the mind. In athletics, both are involved.

Physical exercise, when it is done properly, is definitely beneficial. It adds to our endurance, and it helps us to be more mentally alert and emotionally stable and resilient. There is evidence that it may add months, and perhaps years, to our lives. But, as Paul implies, physical exercise benefits us only in this life. On the other hand, maintaining a healthy spiritual life “holds promise for the present life and also for the life to come” (1 Tim. 4:8).

Spirit and Soul and Body

We are integrated beings. This is why Paul prayed for the Thessalonian Christians that they might be sanctified completely, that their “spirit and soul and body be preserved complete, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Thess. 5:23).

Anyone who has done much counseling is well aware of how these three dimensions interrelate. When we are not functioning well physically, it affects both our psychological and our spiritual lives. When we are not functioning well mentally and emotionally (our psychological dimension), it affects our physical and spiritual lives. And when we are out of God's will spiritually, it affects us physically and psychologically.

Maintaining Physical and Psychological Health

When you feel depressed and God seems far away, it's important to determine your physical and emotional condition. Are you exercising regularly? Are you getting enough rest? Are you experiencing any chemical imbalances? What about your hormone levels? This is why it is important to get a complete physical examination at least once a year.

I remember a seminary student coming to me one day having serious doubts about the existence of God. Here was a man preparing for the ministry, and yet he was having difficulty believing in the most important truth in Christianity.

After listening to him share his thoughts and feelings, I asked him how much sleep he had been getting. He had been studying night and day trying to unravel and understand some of the mysteries in the Scriptures. At that point, I asked him to eat a good meal and then to go back to his room and go to bed and sleep as long as he could sleep.

Several days later, the same man came back to see me. Guess what? His spiritual doubts were gone, simply because he had overcome his physical and psychological exhaustion. In many respects, he was just like Elijah, who, after his great victory over the prophets of Baal, wanted to die. His thinking became horribly distorted. He was depressed and disillusioned. God's prescription for bringing healing to Elijah was in essence what I suggested to this young student. God fed Elijah several good meals and then allowed him to sleep. Several days later, Elijah was a different man (see 1 Kings 19:1-8).

Maintaining Spiritual Health

It's also true that as Christians we can experience many of the symptoms just mentioned if we're violating God's will. We lose our appetites; we can't sleep well; we are depressed, edgy and impatient. The problem may be that we're experiencing real guilt over our sins, which is affecting both our psychological and physical well-being.

I knew of a Christian man who was committing adultery with a divorced woman. There is no question that he had a sensitive conscience. In his heart, he wanted to be a strong, disciplined Christian, but he knew he was disobeying God. To complicate his guilt, he also knew that he never intended to marry this woman.

The end result of this man's sin was extreme depression—so much so that he couldn't function well at his job. Normally a high-energy person, he lost his desire to achieve. Though he had experienced several other stressful crises in his life, the main cause of his depression seemed to be his sin of not living out God's will for his life. When he confessed his sin and refocused his spiritual life, the dark cloud that shrouded his soul disappeared.

Conditioning and Concentration

We don't really know who wrote the book of Hebrews, but whoever it was also used the Greek and Roman games to illustrate and describe the disciplines involved in living the Christian life:

Therefore, since we have so great a cloud of witnesses surrounding us, let us also lay aside every encumbrance and the sin which so easily entangles us, and let us run with endurance the race that is set before us, fixing our eyes on Jesus, the author and perfecter of faith (12:1-2).

The author of Hebrews broadens this athletic metaphor by using the word agona, a Greek athletic term that refers to a contest. Consequently, the author could be referring to a foot race or to other Greek games involving intense competition and self-discipline, such as fighting wild beasts, boxing, wrestling or throwing the discus.

Lay Aside Every Encumbrance

To compete effectively in these games, an athlete had to “lay aside every encumbrance.” The athlete must “throw off everything that hinders” (NIV). The Greek word is ogkon, which refers to “bulk” and “mass.” It can refer to excessive weight of any kind, including our own body weight.

Most overweight people have difficulty competing effectively in athletic activities that call for quickness, speed and endurance. For example, I love downhill skiing. But I learned a rather startling lesson several years ago. I allowed myself to put on 10 pounds beyond my normal weight. While skiing, I noticed I had trouble breathing, something that hadn't bothered me before. In fact, at extremely high altitudes where I had skied without any difficulties on previous occasions, I actually thought I was going to hyperventilate. Before, I loved to lead the pack down the mountain, but now I could hardly keep up. Furthermore, my skills had deteriorated. I couldn't trust my abilities.

Then it suddenly dawned on me why I was having so much trouble. I was overweight. To test my theory, I went on a weight-loss program the next month and then went skiing again. The difference was remarkable. I could breathe again. My endurance was back. I could concentrate and stay in control.

Let Us Run with Endurance

The author of Hebrews immediately identified any excessive weight as “the sin which so easily entangles us.” Paul called this sin “the deeds of the flesh . . . immorality, impurity, sensuality, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, factions, envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these” (Gal. 5:19-21).

However, what about those weights that aren't so flagrant and noticeable? To be perfectly blunt, are you 10 pounds overweight in your Christian life? Have you developed habits that keep you from being on the cutting edge spiritually? Are you spending too much time watching television and movies or reading worthless literature? At the same time, are you neglecting your prayer life, church attendance and Bible reading? To be even more specific, have you developed habits of laziness? Do you lack self-discipline?

Fix Our Eyes on Jesus

“Fixing our eyes on Jesus” is perhaps the most important lesson in this athletic metaphor. Any runner in the Greek stadium who took his eyes off the goal and either looked at the crowds or his competitors would lose valuable time and concentration. So it is in the Christian life. When we take our eyes off the Lord and focus on others, we are in danger of getting sidetracked spiritually.

I remember going through a difficult time in my own life as a young Christian. Several key spiritual leaders I looked up to let me down. They didn’t measure up to my expectations. Unfortunately, the experience became disillusioning, so much so that I was tempted to forsake my goal of serving Jesus Christ in full-time ministry. Consequently, I spent a number of months marking time; worse yet, I was losing time.

In retrospect, I learned a valuable lesson. I had taken my eyes off Jesus Christ and focused on others. Unfortunately, these men weren’t the best examples in the world. I eventually learned that there is only one perfect man—Christ Jesus. He would never let me down.

*When we take our eyes off the Lord and focus on others, we are in danger of
spiritually.*

Don’t misunderstand. We all need Christians we can look up to as examples. That is why Paul told the Corinthians to imitate him as he imitated Jesus Christ (see 1 Cor. 11:1). Yet we must realize that even the most mature Christians will fail, which is why we must keep our eyes focused on Jesus Christ.

The Homestretch

Paul wrote his last letter while chained in a Roman dungeon. Here, he once again used an athletic metaphor to communicate with Timothy. Paul knew he was coming into the homestretch in his Christian race:

For I am already being poured out as a drink offering, and the time of my departure has come (2 Tim. 4:6).

Not too far away from where Paul was chained stood the great Roman coliseum. Sadly, the Roman games had already deteriorated into a spectator sport that involved fights that pitted men against beasts. The blood-hungry crowds were like animals themselves.

As Paul penned this final letter, he certainly visualized in his mind what was happening in this great arena several blocks away. Using athletic language, he wrote:

I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith; in the future there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will award to me on that day; and not only to me, but also to all who have loved His appearing (vv. 7-8).

As Timothy read these words, he would clearly grasp what Paul meant. The word for “fight” (agonizomai) conjured up an image of Greek boxers who fought with ox-hide gloves interlaced with lead and iron. The battle itself was brutal, but to fail to win was even more tragic. The loser often had his eyes gouged out.

Paul’s final metaphor underscores the seriousness of the Christian life. Our real competitor is Satan. We are in a fight against the forces of evil. Paul had won that fight. He had fought to the finish, and he was about to receive the victor’s crown—a special reward for faithfulness and endurance. His faith had not failed him.

Points of Action

In essence, this book is designed to help each of us as Christian men to “discipline” ourselves “for the purpose of godliness” (1 Tim. 4:7). Paul’s two profiles in his letters to Timothy and Titus outline for us 20 characteristics or qualities that define what this godliness actually is.

At the end of each chapter, I have outlined several points of action—steps we can take to develop these particular qualities in our lives. And now as we come to the end of this study, it is time to reflect back to see how we are doing.

Evaluate

In a moment you will evaluate the 20 characteristics we have studied. A seven-point evaluation scale ranging from dissatisfaction to satisfaction follows each characteristic. Please read the following directions:

- Fill out the questionnaire

Read each question carefully and then circle the number that best represents where you are in your spiritual journey. Be as honest as possible, but don’t be too hard on yourself.

Give yourself credit where credit is due.

- Get another point of view

If you are married, have your spouse fill out this questionnaire to reflect her impressions of your abilities before you discuss the questions together. Then compare her scores with your own. If there are discrepancies, discuss why.

Note: If you are single, ask a close male friend to fill out the same survey and follow the same procedures just outlined.

- Analyze the results

First highlight your areas of strength. Then highlight areas where you want to grow and mature and become more disciplined.

- Reread and review

Note the areas where you want to improve. Then go back to the chapters in which these qualities are discussed in depth. Reread each chapter and then review the points of action. Once again, set up specific goals you want to achieve in your Christian life.

Determine Your Maturity Quotient

Overall Spiritual Maturity

1. How do you evaluate your overall maturity as a Christian?

Dissatisfied    1    2    3    4    5    6    7    Satisfied

Above Reproach

2. How do you evaluate your reputation as a Christian among fellow believers as well as among non-Christians?

Dissatisfied    1    2    3    4    5    6    7    Satisfied

The Husband of One Wife

3. How do you evaluate your moral life?

Dissatisfied    1    2    3    4    5    6    7    Satisfied

Temperate

4. How do you evaluate the degree to which you are maintaining balance in your Christian experience?

Dissatisfied    1    2    3    4    5    6    7    Satisfied

Prudent

5. How do you evaluate your ability to be wise and discerning?

Dissatisfied    1    2    3    4    5    6    7    Satisfied

Respectable

6. How satisfied are you with the way your life reflects the life of Jesus Christ?

Dissatisfied    1    2    3    4    5    6    7    Satisfied

Hospitable

7. How do you evaluate your generosity?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Able to Teach

8. How do you evaluate your ability to communicate with others who may disagree with you?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Not Addicted to Wine

9. To what degree are you satisfied with your ability to control various kinds of obsessions and compulsions?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Not Self-Willed

10. How satisfied are you with your ability to relate to other people without being self-centered and controlling?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Not Quick-Tempered

11. How satisfied are you with the way you handle anger?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Not Pugnacious

12. How satisfied are you with your ability to control any form of verbal or physical abuse?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Gentle

13. How objective and fair-minded are you in your relationships with others?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Peaceable (Uncontentious)

14. How satisfied are you with your ability to avoid arguments?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Free from the Love of Money

15. How satisfied are you with your ability to be nonmaterialistic?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Manages His Own Household Well

16. If you are a father, how satisfied are you with your ability to function in this role according to God's plan?

Dissatisfied 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 Satisfied

Loving What Is Good

17. To what degree are you satisfied with your efforts at overcoming evil with good?
